FOUR MORE ARMY AIR MAIL FLIERS KILLED

White House To Raise Ban On Alien Rum To Cut Price

Roosevelt Favors Plan for Trial Period as Market Aid.

Tardy Distillers Get Equal Rights

Quota Increase Will Not Take Effect Until After April 30.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Because liquor prices persist in staying too high to drive out the bootlegger, President Roosevelt has decided to abandon the quota system of limiting importations for a trial period, in which all bars will be down excepting the tariff.

This decision he revealed late yesterday following a meeting of the Cabinet, in which general sentiment favored drastic steps to force prices down to levels which would make illegal competition unprofitable as well as dangerous.

In addition, the President said he had approved a recommendation of Joseph H. Choate, jr., Federal Alcohol Control administrator, to allow distillers who had not applied for permits within the specified period to be given this right and begin immediate manufacture.

Output Increase Assured.

Already all American-type liquor is being imported without limitation, to enable distillers to increase their output, and these two new steps are expected to increase the quantity of honest-made, tax-paid liquor to such an extent as will profoundly affect the market.

Applications for import allocations totaled more than 50,000,000 gallons of both hard liquors and wines when the present quotas were established. But officials look to not more than half this huge importation during the temporary period, since many of the applications were believed to be padded.

Lifting of the quota limitations—a system under which this country agrees to take specified amounts of foreign wines and spirits in exchange for similar concessions on American products by other nations—will not take effect, however, until after the present import period, April 30.

Details Undecided.

Otherwise, the trade agreements already in effect with foreign countries would be abrogated. These concessions, however, cover only the period to the end of next month, after which the President made known his intentions to allow uncurbed imports for a 30 or 60 day period, as yet undecided.

Mr. Roosevelt considered it obvious that prices for liquor are still far too high. He discussed the situation Thursday with Mr. Choate and again it was brought before the Cabinet meeting yesterday. Although in some quarters the present $5-per-gallon tariff is held to be too

Roosevelt Trip South Planned

Florida Fishing in Few Weeks Is Hope of President.

Congress permitting, President Roosevelt will get away from his overloaded desk for a short vacation cruise off the coast of Florida the last of this month.

This he disclosed yesterday to expectant newspapermen, who would accompany him to Florida, with the qualifying stipulation that everything goes well with Congress.

The President plans to go by train to Florida and there board the commodious yacht of Vincent Astor, whose Nourmahal took him on a short cruise in the same waters last year. He wants to get in five or six days' relaxation and fishing in the sunshine of the South.

Although it had been thought Mr. Roosevelt would not leave Washington when Congress is in session, the fact that he contemplates leaving it at this time was indication he is well satisfied, on the whole, with the drift of things on the Hill.

True, a revolt is well under way on the veterans' and pay-cut issues, stiff fights are in prospect over the tariff bill and St. Lawrence treaty, but apparently the President feels he can leave his desk without danger to his general program, which is well advanced.

Farley and Sanders Due to Resign Soon

Watson Talked as G.O.P. Chairman; Both Parties to Reorganize.

By Felix Bruner.

With primaries in many States right around the corner and with Congressional elections due next fall, both political parties are giving serious consideration to the personnel of their high command.

It is probable that neither Postmaster General Farley, the Democratic chairman, nor Everett Sanders, the Republican chairman, will head the party forces when the battle really begins.

President Roosevelt yesterday reiterated his statement that Farley would resign as National chairman as soon as the White House finds a successor. No hint has been given as to who is being considered for the job.

Farley is on the list of Government office holders who also are party officials. Three Democratic committee members, two office holders and one political lawyer, have resigned this week. Other resignations are expected as soon as Farley returns from New York next week and finds time to write letters of acceptance. He himself is expected to bring up the rear of the big parade moving away from the committee, because the President has let it be known that he does not approve of political double lives.

Sanders may resign because many influential Republicans think he should. It wasn't his fault, but the fact can't be disputed that he wasn't what might be called highly successful in bringing about party victories in the last election.

There are many Republicans who believe it would be good strategy to keep from before the public as much as possible leaders who were prominent in the 1932 campaign. In FORMER SENATOR JAMES E. WATSON.

Crop Backers Vie to Secure Federal Doles

Both Houses Pressing for Inclusion of Nearly All Agriculture.

By Raymond Clapper.

Both houses of Congress are now pressing new legislation to extend the scope of Federal supervision over agriculture.

The Senate, while considering the Connally bill to add cattle to the list of basic commodities under the agricultural adjustment act, voted to include also rye, flax and barley. Peanuts were added the day before.

A separate bill is pending to declare sugar a basic commodity. Potato growers are suggesting they ought to get in. Senator Huey Long says he wants to declare cucumbers and sassafras basic commodities, also. Up to press time nothing had been heard from the spinach growers.

The point of all of this agitation is that once anything has been officially declared a basic commodity, then it is eligible to come under the benefits of AAA.

Cotton Control Before House.

In the House, leaders prepared to take up today the Bankhead compulsory cotton control bill. This measure seeks to force recalcitrant cotton farmers into line with the crop reduction program by fixing a prohibitive tax of 50 per cent on any cotton they take to the gin in excess of the amount alloted to them through AAA.

There is double significance in what is happening.

First, there is the advance line of march, the addition of all sorts of commodities, large and small, to the list of legally defined basic commodities which are entitled to the benefit payments of AAA to be financed out of processing taxes.

Second, there is the development of the compulsory follow-up, now concerned with cotton, but already being discussed informally in connection with wheat and other commodities. Eventually, the logical projection of this trend would bring under compulsory control peanuts and whatever else is written in as a basic commodity.

Much of this pressure comes not directly from the Administration, but from growers' themselves through political pressure on their Congressmen. In the beginning

Lorton Probe To Be Moved Into Prison

Wharf Chief Testifies "Stool Pigeon" Told Him 2 in Hotel.

The Lorton Reformatory investigation will be taken directly to the institution, where the committee will hear testimony of convicts and guards relative to misconduct in the prison's administration.

This knowledge came at the close of yesterday's session of the Board of Public Welfare committee which brought out the following testimony.

That one prison employe had partially verified one of the alleged excursions of G. Bryan Pitts and Edmund Rheem to visit their wives at the George Mason Hotel.

That A. C. Tawse, former superintendent of Lorton, was accused of bringing the pair to their rendezvous.

That up until four years ago it was a fairly common practice at the District Jail to manacle prisoners to a pillar called "The Post" for disciplinary purposes.

That among nearby Virginia residents a point for gossip was that purchases of unnecessary equipment were made at the reformatory.

When the committee would transfer its activities from the District Building could not be learned. The next session will be Tuesday at 1:30 p. m.

The hearing at Lorton is the direct result of the request of Capt. W. W. Barnard, superintendent of District penal institutions, who has the committee's promise to investigate fully at the prison.

The most sensational testimony was given by W. A. Stein, superin-

Second Given Death Under Torture Law

Los Angeles, March 9 (AP).—The second sentence under the new California law which fixes death as the penalty for torture in a kidnaping has been pronounced upon a 55-year-old cripple, Harry Brooks.

The first was imposed on William Tanner, Brooks' accomplice in the kidnaping, torture and robbery of Henry Bodkin, lawyer, last December. Bodkin's hands were burned as the robbers sought the hiding place of valuables.

Union League to Paper Room With Million in N G Stock

Chicago, March 9 (AP).—The Union League Club, whose membership includes many financiers, has found a way to use about $1,000,000 worth (face value) of stocks and bonds that today are just so much paper.

They are going to be used for wall paper!

On the assumption that each club member has at least a small quantity of the paper desired, a call has gone forth for them to bring it in to the house committee.

And these gold-engraved and green-bordered stocks will be used to cover the walls of a private dining room.

Fittingly enough, this dining room, located on the eighth floor of the 23-story club building, overlooks the center of the stock and bond business in La Salle street.

The room has already been dubbed the "Million Dollar Room, or The Folly of 1929."

The idea originated with Harry Doherty, manager of the club, and Dayton Keith, banker.

In Doherty's opinion, Union Leaguers might do well to bring their stock brokers to luncheon in this room when it is completed.

"One look at the walls would leave even the stoutest of brokers in a weakened condition," he said, "and you know there is nothing dearer to the heart of present-day business men than to see their brokers in a weakened condition."

Doherty said that the room would remind the diner of the American tendency toward over-speculation.

Reciprocal Tariff Urged By Chamber

Business Opposition to Policy Departure Is Told by Farrell.

Presidential Power Is Backed by O'Brien of Commission.

By Robert C. Albright.

The United States Chamber of Commerce yesterday threw its support behind the principle of reciprocal tariff powers for the President, but asked a Congressional check on White House authority and broad changes in the Administration bill.

Voicing the first hint of business opposition to the proposed departure in tariff policy, James A. Farrell, former president of the United States Steel Corporation, represented the chamber at House Ways and Means Committee hearings.

He asked reciprocal tariff negotiations be made "secondary" to "reasonable protection for American industries subject to destructive competition from abroad."

Earlier, Robert L. O'Brien, Republican chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, surprised committeemen by asserting the pending bill "doesn't go far enough." He said the President should have power to take items from or add them to the free list.

"Pass Bill at Once."

"If I were a high protectionist in Congress, I would say, 'Pass this bill quickly!' he told startled Republican committeemen.

Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee scheduled another eight hours of hearings today, and announced more will be held next week if there are witnesses. He told newspapermen the committee has no intention of making further changes in the bill, unless they are asked by the President.

Speaking for the chamber, Farrell said he favored going beyond present provisions of the bill to give the President authority to transfer items from the free to the dutiable list.

But when Democrats sought to find out if he would extend that power to transfer items from the dutiable to the free list, he asked to be excused from answering the question.

He urged substitution of a "quick acting" tariff adjustment advisory

Austria Fears Nazi "Putsch"

Northern Citizens Near Terror as Hitlerites Are Jailed.

Linz, Austria, March 9 (U.P.).—Discovery of an alleged Nazi plot for a "putsch" to overthrow the Fascist regime in Austria threw the country into turmoil today.

Police spread over upper Austria, rounding up 50 Nazi leaders.

Activities aroused the already disturbed peasantry to tension bordering on panic. Nazis across the border in Germany were reported making preparations to aid in the alleged "putsch."

Thousands of members of the crack Schutzcorps, a semimilitary organization cooperating with the regular army, were mobilized in upper Austria, ready for any emergency.

The Nazis were reportedly goaded into a decision for early action by the announcement of Dollfuss that he intended shortly to proclaim a new constitution for Austria.

Revised Air Mail Facing Senate Fight

Rep. Rogers Demands Army Operation Be Halted.

Senators in Bitter Clash as Measure Is Introduced.

Death of two more Army air-mail fliers yesterday brought added tension to the air-mail situation in Congress.

While a bill was being introduced in the Senate to carry out President Roosevelt's recommendations for turning the mails back to private companies, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers (Republican), Massachusetts, after reading newspaper dispatches of the death of the two fliers, introduced a resolution in the House to stop the Army immediately from carrying the mails.

Byrns Saves Debate.

Speaker Rainey refused to recognize her. After she insisted, by asking unanimous consent to speak for five minutes, Majority Leader Byrns came to the Democratic rescue and moved that the House stand adjourned immediately.

The Senate bill would not only eliminate all officers and directors who "participated in illegal contracts" from the new contract seekers, but would also take air-mail jurisdiction from the Postoffice Department at the end of three years and place it with the Interstate Commerce Commission on the same basis that railroad mail is now handled.

A dispute on the Senate floor was not averted so easily. When Senator McKellar (Democrat), Tennessee, introduced his bill on behalf of himself and Senator Black (Democrat), Alabama, the Republican defender of the air-mail system that was canceled by executive order, February 9, Senator Fess (Republican), Ohio, launched into a bitter attack of the Administration.

He characterized the cancellation move and subsequent intrusting the mails to the Air Corps as "inhuman, un-American and indefensible," and repeated his previous charges that the loss of life among Army fliers constituted "legalized murder."

Lewis Charges "Politics."

Senator Lewis (Democrat), Illinois arose to the defense of the Democratic Administration by charging Fess with taking political advantage of the situation.

"I couldn't enter into a smearing campaign such as some people have," countered the stanch defender of the Postoffice administration of former Postmaster General Walter F. Brown.

"The law requires that 45 days' notice be given to cancel contracts and that hearings be held. This was a conviction without a defense."

His additional charges that the Senate Mail Contract Investigating Committee had refused hearings to interested parties aroused the ire of Black, who begged the Ohioan to name one person he wanted to be called and promised that the committee would promptly call him.

William E. Boeing was the only person Fess could think of and when Black said he had already Robert Jackson, of Jamestown, N. Y., took office yesterday as chief counsel of the Internal Revenue Bureau. Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau administered the oath.

Jackson's nomination was confirmed by the Senate three days ago after sharp debate in which Republicans criticized conduct of the Treasury.

Ace Pilot Makes Last Hop

Lieut. Otto Wienecke, one of the ace pilots of the Army Air Corps, with more than 1,800 flying hours to his credit, was one of two Army airmen who gave their lives to the air-mail yesterday. Wienecke crashed near Burton, Ohio, within 30 miles of his goal, Cleveland. He is shown above (left) with Maj. Gen. James E. Fechet, former Army air chief, after landing a non-rigid airship on the roof of the general's office building with a message from Langley Field.

Labor Board, NRA Defied By 2 Firms

Compliance Director and Johnson Near Rift in Budd Case.

The National Labor Board and the NRA were flatly defied yesterday by two industrialists.

The Labor Board, which previously had conducted an election at the plant of the USL Battery Co. in Buffalo, was informed by the company that it would not agree to or co-operate with any election supervised by the board. The NRA, which had ordered postponement of an election at the Budd manufacturing plant in Philadelphia, was informed that the election had taken place.

The Budd case, long a thorn in the side of the National Recovery Administration, threatened to provoke a serious rift between Gen. Hugh S. Johnson and Compliance Director William H. Davis.

Other developments in the compliance situation included the revelation that Blackwell Smith, second in command of the NRA legal staff, would be assigned a special division of Department of Justice lawyers to handle the Blue Eagle's enforcement difficulties. A move to turn back enforcement to State courts, whenever possible, also was announced.

The Budd case involves a dispute between an American Federation of Labor local and the union which the company set up after the recovery act was passed. Last fall it brought on a strike. Recently, Compliance Director Davis issued a ruling that the employers had plainly interfered with their workers' rights of self-organization granted under the recovery act. He ordered that an election be held to determine whether the employes wanted any organization at all, and warned company officials that if the order were disobeyed, their Blue Eagle would be taken away and their contracts with the Government canceled.

Davis agreed, however, that 800

Senate Chief For Whitney's Control Plan

Robinson Hits Pending Bill for Exchange Regulation.

By Franklyn Waltman Jr.

Advocating the creation of "a new agency" to supervise the operation of securities markets, Senate Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson last night indicated he leaned more toward the proposal put forth by the New York Stock Exchange than he did the pending Fletcher-Rayburn bill.

Senator Robinson urged the "new agency" proposal in a speech he delivered before the Newport News (Va.) Chamber of Commerce. A copy of his speech was distributed from his office here. He did not go into details in his speech, which perplexed those in charge of the stock market bill.

Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, revealed that the provisions in his bill placing stock exchanges under control of the Federal Trade Commission had not been changed, although the measure has been modified in other respects.

The committee chairman said he had not been impressed by any of the arguments opposing control by the trade commission. Ferdinand Pecora, counsel to the committee, and one of those revising the bill, made a similar statement. The revised bill will be made public on Monday.

Remarks Significant.

The Robinson reference to a "new agency" as well as his other remarks on the Stock Exchange control bill were regarded as being significant in view of a conference he had Thursday with President Roosevelt.

Returning from that conference the Democratic leader said a "modified" Stock Exchange bill would be passed at this session. He emphasized the word "modified" and

French Fliers Find Lost City Where Queen of Sheba Ruled

(Copyright, 1934, Associated Press.)

Paris, March 9 (AP).—In the blistering sands of ancient Arabia two French fliers believed today they had found the long-sought capital of the wealthy Queen of Sheba.

"We discovered the legendary city of the Queen of Sheba. Twenty towers or temples still stand," said the terse message Capt. Corniglion Molinier and Andre Malraux sent the French air ministry.

Malraux, famous as an author and archeologist, indicated that the place, which was called Mariaba by the ancient Greeks and Marib by others, was covered by sand, but that aerial photographs revealed well-preserved vestiges of its former glory.

The exact location was not given, but was said to be near the Persian Gulf and about 1,000 miles southeast of Jerusalem—at the northern edge of the huge waste called the Arabian Desert or Rub-El-Khali.

Archeologists and Biblical scholars long have been interested in the Queen of Sheba's city—wealthy with gold and jewels and spices and luxuries.

Marib was a flourishing city until after the life of Christ.

Gold abounded and a chief source of wealth was the trade route from India to Egypt and northern Syria, which passed through the Sabean capital.

But in the first century after Christ the Ptolemies exchanged the southern Arabian route for a direct road from Alexandria to India, and the decline of the wealthy city and its surrounding country began.

Lt. Wienecke Dies in Crash In Ohio Field During Storm

Sergt. Sell Fatally Hurt When Craft Falters in Florida.

Service Death Toll Mounts to Eight

Two Others Are Injured at Daytona Beach; Cargo Saved.

Cheyenne, Wyo., March 9 (U.P.).—Two more Army air-mail pilots were killed tonight when their plane crashed into a pasture one mile north of the Cheyenne Municipal Airport.

The plane had just left the airport with a load of airmail for Salt Lake City.

It was understood the pilot of the plane was Lieut. Arthur Kerwin, a former Cheyenne resident. His companion was Lieut. Howard.

Both were killed instantly. The cause of the crash was not learned immediately.

Chardon, Ohio, March 9 (AP).—Blinded by a snow squall, Lieut. Otto Wienecke, an Army pilot of long experience, crashed to his death in a lonely corn field near here today, the seventh Army flier who has fallen to his death since the service was assigned the task of carrying air mail.

A few hours later Sergt. Ernest B. Sell was killed in an Army mail-carrying plane near Daytona Beach, Fla., making the eighth fatality.

Almost a month to the day after President Roosevelt had pressed the Army into the air-mail lanes, Lieut. Wienecke took off from Newark, N. J., with a load of mail for Cleveland.

Three hours overdue, he apparently became lost over the Chardon area, and crashed, dying from a broken neck. Ten sacks of mail were taken from his plane and delivered to the Chardon postoffice for rerouting.

Farmer Hears Crash.

John Hess, a farmer, heard the plane in trouble about 5 a.m.

"I looked out of the window and saw the two headlights of the ship very low," Hess states. "The snow was coming down fast. It seemed the motor was sputtering. Suddenly I heard a crash. I found the plane a couple of hundred yards from the house, its nose buried in the ground. I looked inside, shook the pilot's shoulder; he didn't move or make a sound."

Indications were that Wienecke was flying so low he had no chance to use his chute. The altimeter of the cracked ship registered 600 feet.

Lieut. Wienecke was 32, unmarried, and a service flier who came up from a private's rank. He entered military service in 1920, receiving a commission in the Air Corps five years later. He is survived by his parents, who live in Patchogue, N. Y.

Lindys Make "Mystery" Visit

Colonel and Wife Are Silent on Reasons for Trip Here.

Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh arrived unexpectedly in Washington late yesterday, went to the Hay-Adams House from Bolling Field, where their airplane landed, and refused to reveal the purpose of their visit.

It was reported that Lindbergh might call on President Roosevelt, with whom he has differed on cancellation of air-mail contracts, but the White House said he had no appointment. It was added, however, that the flier would be welcome if he wished to call.

Immediately following cancellation of the air-mail contracts, Lindbergh sent a letter to the White House criticizing the President's action. His attorney made it public before the President received it.

The Lindbergh letter was referred by the President to Postmaster General Farley. The President himself took no public notice of the incident, although reproval of his action in making the message public came from the White House. Farley replied that the aviator was not in possession of complete knowledge of the facts.

Paris Starts Race to Beat Reich to Arms

Huge Emergency Fund Is Asked for Invincible Defense Force.

Paris, March 9 (AP).—A bond issue of 3,000,000,000 francs ($195,000,000), in addition to the regular arms budget, was sought by the French government today to make France invincible in the air and on land and water.

Special emphasis was placed on the "necessity" of a strong air fleet in a bill introduced in Parliament.

A flat refusal to disarm "while Germany is rearming" was contained in the measure. This declaration was published by the foreign office and sent to Geneva, Berlin and London.

"An air fleet of the first magnitude and capable of getting into action instantaneously" was called for. Authorization was asked by the government to reorganize the air force, to strengthen the coastal defense and to spend a third of the appropriation asked on the army.

At London yesterday the British undersecretary for air told Parliament that Great Britain has concluded she must "have parity in the air." The British defense forces have asked appropriations totaling $577,851,880 for next year, about $24,206,200 more than last year.

New Allies Aid Fight to Pass Seaway Treaty

LaGuardia Backs Project; Ratification to Be Sought Wednesday.

Senate advocates of the St. Lawrence waterway treaty yesterday pushed their campaign to force ratification of the pact next Wednesday. Three letters designed to allay additional opposition to the treaty were read into the Congressional Record.

Senator Key Pittman (Democrat), Nevada, presented a letter from Maj. Gen. E. M. Markham, chief of Army engineers, contending construction of the St. Lawrence waterway would not injure prospects for development of the Mississippi River waterways.

The chief of engineers first held that "our inland waterway system is not dependent on the Great Lakes for its water supply," and that the flow of interior rivers "is ample to provide for their maximum development for navigation."

After discussing technical details regarding development of the Mississippi and its relation to water diversion, Gen. Markham explained his department "has committed itself fully and whole-heartedly to the improvement of our great interior waterways system, and it would be its duty to present fully to Congress the need for augmenting the water supply of the Mississippi River by diversion from the Great Lakes if this supply were necessary to the present and future development of the Mississippi River system."

Says N. Y. Is "Not Afraid."

Senator La Follette (Republican), Wisconsin, presented to the Senate a letter from Mayor Fiorella H. LaGuardia, stating that "no special interest or agency claiming to speak for the City of New York is justified in opposing the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence treaty on the ground that it is inimical to the welfare of the people of our city."

Mayor LaGuardia said the President and Gov. Lehman were "entirely correct in their public statements to the effect that the municipalities of this State will readily absorb cheap electricity from the public power project on the St. Lawrence" and that such power can not be developed without a treaty with Canada.

He added that "no official study has ever been sponsored by the City of New York that supports the claim that completion of the seaway will injure the commerce and shipping of our port," which, he said, "is not afraid of inland competition."

He thought building the St. Lawrence waterway "will inevitably increase the profitable exchange of goods between New York and the other great American cities in the littoral of the Great Lakes."

F. P. Walsh Favors Ratification.

"A temporary or slight diversion of export and import tonnage," he asserted, "does not justify, in my opinion, the obstructing of a National project so obviously in the interest of the United States as a whole."

The third testimonial in behalf of ratification came from Frank P. Walsh, charman of the New York Power Authority, in a telegram to Senator George W. Norris (Republican), of Nebraska. He denied that the waterway would benefit private power companies and asserted that defeat of the treaty would be "the greatest victory for these interests in history." Rejection of the treaty would mean "robbing American consumers of cheap power," he maintained.

Opposition to the treaty comes chiefly from the North Atlantic seaboard States, the Mississippi Valley States and Illinois. Both New York Senators have fought ratification.

Huge Tooth Found In Oklahoma Sandpit

Mangum, Okla. (U.P.).—Discovery of a huge tooth in a sandpit near Mangum led to a call for the local dentists to say what kind of animal grew it.

The decision was that it must have been a prehistoric mastodon. The tooth was more than a foot long and weighed 15 pounds. It was uncovered at a depth of 22 feet, a quarter-mile from the spot where a mastodon's jawbone was unearthed several years ago.

Walter Phillips made both discoveries.

Capt. Herbert Turner Dies; Battleground Cemetery Head

CAPT. HERBERT TURNER.

"Good by, boy, I'm going."

With those words, Capt. Herbert Turner, 66, superintendent of Battleground National Cemetery, died yesterday. With him was William Allan, the retired sailor, who was his constant companion and assistant.

Last Monday Capt. Turner had returned from Walter Reed Hospital after two months' treatment for a heart ailment.

Allan, asleep in his quarters upstairs, heard the captain cough. He came down and asked if he could do anything. Capt. Turner said he couldn't catch his breath, but, with the old sailor's help, he left his bed and sat down in a chair. A few moments later, attempting to regain the bed, Capt. Allan collapsed. He was dead before Dr. Daniel B. Washington could arrive.

Death had dissolved a partnership between an infantryman and a chief gunner's mate.

Turner was born in Chichester, England, October 3, 1867. He enlisted in the First Missouri Volunteers at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War and remained in the service until December 10, 1919, retiring as a master sergeant of Infantry after having held the temporary rank of captain.

Prior to coming to Washington in 1929 as superintendent of Battleground National Cemetery, Capt. Turner held similar positions at National cemeteries in St. Augustine, Fla., Mobile, Ala., and Richmond, Va. He would have celebrated his fifth anniversary here on March 21.

A bachelor, the superintendent's closest survivor is a niece, Miss A. L. Parkham, of Winter Park, Fla., who will attend funeral services in Arlington at 11:30 a. m. Monday, with members of the Spanish War Veterans and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Allan also served in the Spanish and World wars, but did not know Turner until he came to the cemetery a few years ago as a general utility man.

When the historic cemetery was turned over to the National Park Service last summer, Allan stayed on, although he does not have a regular employe's status. Capt. Turner said he could not do without him.

Since Capt. Turner entered the hospital in January, Harvey Mitchell, chief of the Northwest section of the Capital's parks, has been acting superintendent. He will continue until a successor is named.

Japan Invasion Of China Seen By "Solicitude"

Tokyo Query About Safety of U. S. Missions Hints at Aggressive Step.

Pieping, China, March 9 (AP).—Questions of a Japanese official, regarding American mission properties in North China, aroused fears in some quarters tonight concerning possible Japanese intentions on the continent.

The official, who is attached to the Japanese military garrison in Tientsin, was quoted by American missionaries as saying the Nipponese army leaders wanted the information "in order to avoid damaging these properties in the event the Japanese army found it necessary to come south of the Great Wall in the near future."

It was pointed out that when Henry Pu-Yi was made Emperor of the Japanese-sponsored state of Manchukuo March 1, the Japanese announced to the world they had no ambitions south of China's great wall.

The Japanese Legation denied that the inquiries made of the missionaries were significant and declared Japanese military chieftains did not want to violate their recent pledges.

A dispatch from Canton today said independent Canton government leaders have agreed to abolish their posts and accept the rule of the Nanking Nationalist government for Southern China.

Several days ago an impending strong revival of activities to obtain volunteers for an irregular campaign in Manchuria was reported in Canton dispatches.

J. A. Somervell, Spanish War Veteran, Dies

Rockville President Had Resided Many Years in Far West.

James A. Somervell, 74, who spent his youth panning gold in the Rockies and knocking about Alaskas mining camps, died suddenly yesterday in the home of his niece, Margaret Dawson, at Rockville, Md.

The son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Somervell, of Rockville, Mr. Somervell was born in Benedict, Md. The family later moved to Rockville. Mr. Somervell left home at the age of 21 to work on a Texas cattle ranch.

He later went to Arizona where he operated a ranch of his own before drifting farther west, and finally into Alaska, hunting gold. At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War he enlisted and was sent to the Philippines, where he saw action. He also fought with American troops in China during the Boxer rebellion.

In Alaska he met the late Tex Rickard and they became fast friends. Mr. Somervell returned to Rockville in 1916, from the Philippines, following the death of his wife.

He is survived by a daughter, Mary Somervell, and three nieces and nephews.

Army Buying Blame Denied By MacArthur

Staff Merely Designated Types of Planes to Be Purchased.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur yesterday told the investigating committee of the House Military Affairs Committee the General Staff of the Army had no responsibility for, or knowledge of, War Department purchases of trucks and other material.

Called by the committee in its inquiry into alleged "profiteering and irregularities," the Chief of Staff said, however, that if he had been charged with procurement of airplanes and motorized eqiupment, there would have been no suggestion of irregularities, and no violation of the intent of the act of July 2, 1926.

Gen. MacArthur strongly urged that greater authority be vested in the Chief of Staff, explaining he is retiring from that post in November, and that the need for more control by the General Staff of such matters as procurement has impressed itself more and more strongly upon him.

Woodring Recell Seen.

After hearing Gen. MacArthur disclaim responsibility for purchases and state his inability, therefore, to assist the imemdiate inquiry into matters also before the District grand jury, Chairman Rogers (Democrat), New Hampshire, said it probably would be necessary to recall Assistant Secretary of War Woodring and pursue annother line of investigation.

Rogers said it wats probable that the qua rtermaster generatl, Maj. Gen. J. L. DeWitt, and the chief of ordinance, Maj. Gen. Samuel Hof, would be called.

While Gen. MacArthur's testimony was in executive sessions, it was learne dafterward the committee obtained from him new light on the aircraft procurement situation. The part played by the Army general staff in procuring planes was merely to designate the number of units and kinds of planes—pursuit, bombing and attack—desired.

Remaining negotiations were left, Gen. MacArthur said, to the Air Corps and the Assistant Secretary of War.

If specifications were so drawn that only one builder could obtain the contracts, that did not come to the attention of the general staff, he said. This siuation, he asserted, applied to trucks and all equipment.

Independents Heard.

Advocating that the chief of staff be given greater supervision of purchasing, Gen. MacArthur said, "If the general staff had been in charge there wouldn't have been these evident violations of the act of 1926."

The committee heard also representatives of the Spartan Aircraft Corporation, of Tulsa, Okla., add their protests to those of other so-called "independents" against the Army's procurement methods involving negotiated contracts.

Dillinger Hand Traced in Two Gang Killings

Frankie Pope 'Bumped Off' to Prevent Release of Informer, Police Say.

Chicago, March 9 (AP).—John Dillinger, toy pistol escape bandit, still was gone today, but Chicago police, just to show he was not forgotten, set about to connect him with one more crime, if not two.

Capt. John Stege declared he saw Dillinger's hand in the murder last Wednesday of "West Side" Frankie Pope, gambler and ex-convict.

The police also called in the widow of another recent murder victim—Daniel Losce, who they revealed was an informer for Indiana State police—for questioning in the Dillinger case, or cases.

A photograph album and a girl were the clews which Stege said connected Dillinger with Pope's assassination.

On a list of prisoners which it is thought were Pope's clients—he was seeking to obtain their paroles, it is supposed—police found the name of Welton Sparks, serving 25 years in Leavenworth for mail robbery.

They declared Sparks' former wife, Evelyn, was a friend of Dillinger, and claimed they had identified her as the girl who visited Dillinger in his cell at Crown Point, Ind.

Pictures of Mrs. Sparks were found in one of Dillinger's hideouts in Chicago in January, police said.

The motive for the slaying—performed when the search for Dillinger was at its hottest—was vague, unless, police said, the Indiana desperado did it to prevent Sparks' release. His release would not normally come about until 1957.

Crown Point officials went ahead with investigations of how the restless bandit walked out of the town's "breakproof" jail. Prosecutor Robert G. Estill (Democrat), named a special assistant prosecutor to help put the facts before a special grand jury which will meet Monday.

The Federal Government took its eight prisoners out of the Crown Point Jail to the St. Joseph County Jail at South Band.

Geneva Hopes For Arms Cuts Hit New Blow

Paris Reply to Britain Is Awaited as Last Possibility.

Geneva, March 9 (AP).—Amid fast-fading hopes of disarmament, the League of Nations tonight awaited a new French memorandum to Great Britain to determine whether there are last-minute chances to save the World Disarmament Conference.

France, it was forecast, will insist upon guarantees that coercive measures will be taken against a nation found guilty of violation of projected treaties.

The dream of disarmament received another jolt with publication by the league today simultaneously in Geneva, London, Paris and Berlin of documents bearing on the situation.

"Nobody believes," said a German memorandum of December 18, 1933, to France, "any longer in the possibility of a general international disarmament."

Germany "is entitled to obtain in one way or another equality of treatment as regards her own security," the note asserted.

The hitherto unpublished letter of Louis Barthou, new French foreign minister, to Arthur Henderson, chairman of the World Disarmament Conference, on February 10 firmly refused to disarm while Germany is rearming.

"A rapid solution" of the arms problem, the letter stated, is necessary because of the "acceleration" of rearmament "by certain countries in violation of treaties."

One month from tomorrow the steering committee is to meet to decide if and when the World Disarmament Conference shall reassemble.

The United States, it was held, has made contributions to international security, but can make no additional commitments as a safeguard against becoming embroiled in an European war.

Two News Men Charge Racers As Kidnapers

Employes of Coast Paper Attacking Auto Deaths Sign Warrants.

Los Angeles, March 9 (AP).—Complaints charging that a reporter and cameraman of a Los Angeles newspaper that has been campaigning against automobile racing were kidnaped at a racing victim's funeral were issued today against Babe Stap, Indianapolis and Los Angeles driver, and two other men.

The complaint was signed by James Lee, reporter, who said he and John Bennus, cameraman, were abducted and beaten by a dozen men late Wednesday at the funeral of Ernie Triplett, a racer who with two other drivers was killed last Sunday at Imperial, Calif.

Bennus reported he was kicked and beaten and his camera destroyed. Lee said he was handled roughly before he and Bennus were put into separate automobiles and taken to the newspaper office.

Guns Threatened.

Executives of the newspaper said several men came into the office with the two employes, "openly admitted" seizing them as "a direct result of a vigorous campaign against 'legalized murder' on the race tracks of southern California," and served an ultimatum that "no further pictures of race track death accidents and funerals should be published."

Information was given the district attorney's office, it was said today, that one man was reported to have boasted "machine guns" might be used.

Stapp denied he was one of the men reported to have kicked and beat Bennus and said he did not know who they were.

Seized at Funeral.

Others named in the complaint were Al Savage and Ted Devlin, who could not be reached. District Attorney Buron Fitts said other arrests were expected.

Bennus said he was about 100 yards from Triplett's grave, trying to obtain a photograph, when he and Lee were set upon by men they identified as racing drivers and followers.

Under the California kidnaping law, a maximum penalty of death is provided in cases where victims are injured.

Civil Works Employes Found Elephant's Tusk

Enid, Okla. (U.P.).—The time when Oklahoma could boast native elephants is not so far in the past, observers in this section believed after a tusk 30 inches long was dug out of a shallow gravel pit in northwest Garfield County.

Civil Works employes found the relic, which was similar to another found also at shallow depth near Carrier a few days before. The shallow depth led to the belief of comparatively recent existence of the animals, as geological time goes.

Bolt of Lightning Deafens Skipper

Quarantine Boat Damaged Near Norfolk.

Norfolk, Va., March 9 (Spl.). Electrical fixtures on quarantine boat Q-10 were put out of commission by lightning last night during a thunderstorm.

Capt. J. B. Tillett, master of the craft, was rendered temporarily deaf by the shock. He is recovering his hearing today.

The boat was off Lambert's Point when the sudden bolt shook the craft from stem to stern. There were nine others on the boat, all members of the Old Point Quarantine Station staff. Several were knocked down.

Tammany Plan To Oust Curry Disintegrates

Leader Shows Confidence Upon Return From Florida Trip.

New York, March 9 (AP).—John F. Curry, back after six weeks' vacation in Florida, apparently was unconcerned today about reports of an uprising of district leaders that would oust him as leader of Tammany Hall.

"Nothing to it," he said.

Ignoring the revolt that some expected would come to climax with his return, the Tammany leader spent the day talking informally with trusted backers.

Postmaster General James A. Farley, generally credited with being the principal supported of the "Oust Curry Movement," also was in town, conferring with party leaders.

In some quarters party leaders said Farley was seeking to bolster the drive to end Curry's rule, but as yet was unwilling to declare publicly his opposition to the Tammany leader.

Tammany leaders who had been proclaiming the necessity for a change in leadership were silent. The name of no candidate who might oppose Curry was mentioned.

For the time being it appeared, in the opinion of many leaders, that the opposition to the Curry regime had collapsed and that he would retain his grip on the leadership of the famous old political machine for a while.

Some leaders felt that the opposition to Curry probably would subside until after the primaries and election in November, and that the issue would not be forced to a vote in the New York County executive committee.

These leaders felt that eventually a change in leadership would come about, but expressed the belief that Curry could—through his long associations with many of the district leaders—block an immediate drive to oust him.

Package of Cigarettes Becomes of Age

Port Clinton, Ohio (U.P.).—A pack of cigarettes "became of age" here recently and to celebrate their birthday, promptly "went up in smoke."

Back in 1913, the Port Clinton Business Men's Association held a dinner. Every guest was presented a leather case and package of cigarettes.

G. J. Daum, a jeweler here, was among those attending and received, with the others, a package of fags. As Daum didn't smoke, he just kept them, for 21 years. Recently, he gave them to Ezra Hess here and told him to "light up."

Jury's Membership Cut To 11; Other Gets Job

Maquoketa, Iowa, March 9 (U.P.).—A jury deciding a will contest case here had only 11 members today.

Clyde Waite, one of the jurors, was offered a job as carpenter, which will last for months. He took it, and the judge excused him. If a man can get a job, the judge commented, the law can adapt itself to the situation.

U.S. Chamber Comes Out for Trade Tariff

Farrell Voices Business Opposition to Any Policy Change.

board for the present Tariff Commission.

In presenting the chamber's recommendations, he conceded one has been taken care of in a pending Administration amendment continuing in force flexible provisions of the present law on all items not specifically covered by reciprocal bargaining agreements.

Three Primary Recommendations.

Reflecting action of the chamber's board of directors, his recommendations were:

"1. That, in granting authority to make tariff changes in the interest of reciprocal tariff negotiations, the Congress write into the law the definite limitation that no rate be lowered to a point where American industry and agriculture shall be subjected to destructive foreign competition.

"2. That the flexible provisions of the tariff act be maintained, embodying a basic controlling formula, laid down by Congress, according to which shall be determined the adequate protective level at which individual tariff rates shall be set; and,

"3. That, through a tariff adjustment board or other instrumentality, and in advance of such board making its recommendations to the President, there be full opportunity for American businesses likely to be affected by contemplated reciprocal tariff or other tariff changes to present testimony as to the incidence upon their respective enterprises of such changes."

In an entire morning before the committee, Chairman O'Brien of the Tariff Commission insisted the proposed bill only continues tariff powers now in force.

"The President is and must remain the supreme tariff maker in the United States," he said.

"The present method is Presidential tariff making. The only difference is that in making trade agreements you get results. In this legislation you have the promise of reward."

He said he could not understand "why people fear a method which promises results, holding to a principle that doesn't get results."

A Bargaining Weapon.

Urging the committee to go even further and give the President power to deal with the free list, O'Brien said there ought to be a duty on coffee, silk and newsprint, to give the United States a bargaining weapon, respectively, with Brazil, Japan and the Baltics.

"You will never get Congress to do a thing like that," injected Representative Isaac Bacharach (Republican), New Jersey.

Later, referring to a duty on newsprint, Farrell testified:

"You must be very delicate when you suggest a thing like newsprint. It is one of those glorified things we have to keep in a hermetically sealed container."

O'Brien told the committee he would like to see the present flexible tariff law repealed in its entirety, describing it as "cumbersome and slow" in operation. He said he "disliked" the pending amendment to continue it partially in force.

The Tariff Commission chairman said the reciprocal bargaining plan is spreading "like wildfire abroad," and he "regretted" its spread.

Asked by Chairman Doughton what he meant by that, he said:

"It would be better if world markets were more open all the way around. Trade agreements, quotas, &c., are bothersome. The more open the trade situation is, the better. I am sorry the world is so torn by present tariff methods."

Citing American exports of automobiles, cotton and wheat, he denied that American labor, even on the highest wage scales, can not compete with cheap foreign labor in the world markets.

Avoid Quotas, Farrell Asks.

Farrell asked that reciprocal bargaining agreements be based on "the unconditional most-favored-Nation principle," avoiding quotas "and other artificial plans inconsistent with this principle."

The former United States Steel Corporation official warned against "loose thinking" that might lead to importations of a destructive nature.

"The fallacy that international trade means a dollar for dollar trade between two countries is the false promise upon which this idea of barter rests," he said.

"A glance at the statistics relating to our foreign trade will indicate how impossible it is for the United States to agree to the proposition that she must buy from each country in value the equivalent of what she sells to that country."

He asked that the United States "avoid in negotiations with any country, deals that discriminate against other countries with whom it is necessary to maintain satisfactory trade relations."

Federal Police Plan Approved By Governors

Copeland Proposal Aimed at Ending Crimes of Violence.

Governors of nearly all States have given their support to a plan for a Federal police force, Senator Copeland (Democrat), New York, said yesterday. Copeland is chairman of the Senate committee investigating crime.

Copeland's plan provides that the Governor of each State shall appoint a man who would act in the capacity of a Federal police officer, cooperating in his State with the Division of Investigation of the Department of Justice.

The man so appointed would be trained and paid by the Government, but would operate as a State official.

"His duties would be exactly the same as the special agents of the Department of Justice," Copeland said. "In event of a kidnaping or some other serious crime where there is a Federal violation, this man would be sent to cooperate with the local officials."

Copeland listed Govs. George White of Ohio, J. M. Futrell of Arkansas, Harry H. Flood of Utah, A. W. Hockenhull of New Mexico, Clyde L. Herring of Iowa and Hül McAlister of Tennessee as approving the plan.

A questionnaire asking their opinion of the proposal was sent to each of the 48 Governors.

The arrest was made on information supplied by Savio, who had been in New Orleans for a year, barely able to make a living, but refusing to leave because he believed Paden was in this vicinity.

-:- The New Dealers -:-

—The Low Down on the Higher Ups—

Brandeis Is Found on New Deal Sidelines

Jurist Trained for 20 Years, and Now He's Out of Game.

Publication of "The New Dealers" in The Washington Post does not necessarily imply editorial indorsement of its views.

By the Unofficial Observer.

IN his 18 years on the Supreme Court Justice Louis Dembrtz Brandeis has turned the bench into an intellectual soap box. The mental gymnastics of the law have never intrigued him, but he has followed the state of the Nation as though he were the President of the United States and has become a central statistical board and economic planning commission in himself. Justice Brandeis' decisions have followed the breadlines and the bankruptcies rather than the election returns, which, 30 years ago, represented the court's greatest concession to the existence of the Nation's social problems.

Brandeis and Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes stood together as the shining beacons of American liberalism. They both believed in the flexibility of the Constitution, the right and duty of experimentation, and in the superiority of human rights over property rights, but there the similarity ended. Justice Holmes was skeptical, acquiescent, weary. He knew that institutions would change anyhow, with or without the consent of the Supreme Court. For the rest, he preferred to read good literature rather than study economics. Justice Brandeis was eager, energetic, often intolerant of experimentation along lines other than those which he approved. He is a zealous reformer and a profound student of Government, business and men.

A sojourn of 18 years far behind the political firing line has not quenched his lust for battle, and he follows Roosevelt's political football game, play by play, as though he were the regular quarter back laid up on the side lines with a bad knee. For the New Deal is "the Big Game"—the game for which he has been training for more than 20 years—and here he is on the side lines.

His tragedy is that he is now an old man of 77. He is the prisoner of time and his own past. He was born in Louisville, Ky., where he attended the public schools and later the University of Louisville. Then, like many Americans after the Franco-Prussian War, he went to Germany for the higher education, studying two years at Dresden, before returning to get his law degree from Harvard Law School. He began the practice of law in Boston in 1879 and had practiced for 21 years before he did anything worth recording.

Caught in First Wave Of Reform Movement.

Then he caught the first wave of the great reform movement which was to produce the progressive administrations of Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson and, in time, to carry Franklin D. Roosevelt to all but supreme power over the Nation's destinies. Brandeis became the legal guide, philosopher and friend of the progressive movement. He began by working out a scheme for cheaper life insurance through the Massachusetts savings banks. He then devised a scheme to allow extra dividends to Massachusetts public utilities, which reduced their rates and established the "prudent investment" theory of valuation as a rate basis. He was counsel for Louis P. Glavis, Department of the Interior agent, in the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation which shook the Taft Administration and helped split the Republican party in 1912.

He was counsel for the shippers in the Interstate Commerce Commission investigation of freight rates in 1910-11 and counsel for the I. C. C. in the second freight-rate case in 1913-14. He was counsel for the people in the proceedings which challenged the constitutionality of the Oregon and Illinois women's ten-hour day laws, the Ohio nine-hour law, the California eight-hour law and the Oregon minimum wage law.

He led the fight against the New Haven monopoly of New England's transportation system in 1907-1913 and earned such hatred in Boston business and banking circles as has seldom been visited upon a public man. He preserved for the City of Boston its municipal subway system. He was chairman of the board of arbitration in the New York garment workers' strike of 1910. This career, though brilliant, was not substantially different from that of many other liberal lawyers who espoused the cause of social justice during the first decade of the twentieth century. Then he caught hold of Woodrow Wilson's coat tails and was given his first free ride in a lifetime of painful battling.

The New Haven fight had given him National advertising, but he achieved real prominence by his little pamphlet entitled "Other People's Money," an analysis of the meaning of the findings of the Pujo "Money Trust" investigation of 1912. "Other People's Money" was the prophecy of an inspired Old Testament order and in 1933 another investigation of Wall street rediscovered that the same practices which Brandeis had exposed were being applied by a new set of financial gangsters. Brandeis served to crystallize intelligent public resentment against the private monopoly of public credit.

Believes in Capitalism With Forced Competition.

"Other People's Money" was one of the catch phrases of Mr. Roosevelt's campaign for the Presidency and he wigwagged again to Brandeis above the dust of battle, by advocating "bold experimentation" about the time that Brandeis defended "experimentation" in his great dissent in the Oklahoma ice case.

Despite this cajolery, Roosevelt is by no means assured of Justice Brandeis' support when the New Deal legislation comes before the Supreme Court, and one of the great worries of the Administration is whether Brandeis will sustain them. The stern old liberal believes in capitalism maintained by forced competition.

Justice Louis D. Brandeis, who has turned the bench into an intellectual soap box.

He is against bankers only because he thinks they have destroyed capitalism by bringing about industrial combinations for the sole purpose of furnishing commissions to stock brokers and reorganization fees to the bankers. He does not believe that our great agglomerations of capital represent true industrial efficiency, but merely financial buccaneering. He is at heart a trust buster of the vintage of 1912 who would have made the greatest Attorney General the country has ever had, if he had been appointed to that office in 1913.

President Wilson wanted to give the job to Brandeis, but lost his nerve when he realized how the conservatives would howl for Brandeis' head on a silver charger. As it was, there was uproar enough when Wilson nominated this political John the Baptist to the Supreme Court bench in 1916, without giving the bankers a chance to do a dance of the seven veils with anti-Semitism as the leitmotif.

Since then Brandeis has been forced to express his social viewpoint through the difficult and slow media of his legal opinions—most of which have been dissents—and through his legal proteges. He is not directly consulted by President Roosevelt or any one else of importance in the Administration, but plays his part as privy councilor by a sort of "remote control," through the young Administration lawyers who formerly served as secretaries to himself and his friend, Justice Holmes.

As graduates of Harvard Law School, these New Deal attorneys reflect Brandeis and Prof. Felix Frankfurter in their line of thought. Each year for many years a star man from Harvard Law was assigned to Holmes and Brandeis. Seven of them have been prominent in the Roosevelt Administration. Brandeis' former secretaries include Dean G. Acheson, whom Roosevelt appointed and removed as Undersecretary of the Treasury; William Sutherland, counsel to the Tennessee Valley Authority; and Paul Freund, a lawyer in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Holmes' former secretaries account for Thomas G. Corcoran of the RFC, Lloyd Landau and Donald Hiss of the Public Works Administration, and Alger Hiss of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Program Would Smash Big Business.

From these men, who maintain their personal and intellectual contacts with Brandeis, one gathers that the gaunt old fighter has been morally sideswiped by the collectivist trend of the New Deal. Brandeis, being fundamentally a moralist, has a rather low opinion of human nature and doesn't think that men have enough intelligence or integrity to direct a planned economy. He would like to decentralize industry, through the power of taxation. His morality is of the negative "thou shalt not" order which preceded the two positive Christian commandments on which hang all the law and the prophets. He feels uneasy in the presence of bigness, whether of business or finance.

His program is to smash big business and high finance, and it is little changed from 1912. Roosevelt is gambling that it has probably changed somewhat, for in recent opinions Brandeis has defended the right of legislative bodies to call virtually anything they want a public utility and subject it to Government regulation.

Nevertheless, many lawyers in the New Deal fear that Roosevelt's legislative program will receive more drastic criticism from the Great Liberal Louis Brandeis than from some of the hard-shelled conservatives like Justices Butler and McReynolds. The conservatives usually keep their ears a little closer to the ground than do the liberals, who have fixed their eyes—not on the stars—but on the particular galaxy that each liberal has discovered for himself. Brandeis may yet live to teach President Roosevelt to put his faith, not in the doctrinaires but in the cynics.

The Roosevelt Administration has not handled him any too wisely. The unceremonious manner in which Acheson was booted from the Treasury was followed by Henry Morgenthau's equally unceremonious ousting of Prof. Harold M. Groves, a Wisconsin liberal who had just been engaged as a tax expert for the Treasury. Groves was a close friend of Brandeis and it is rumored that Brandeis' daughter Susan was visiting the Groves when the word of Morgenthau's brusque action reached Madison.

Meanwhile, there is something majestic, ominous and tragic about this chained statesman of the Supreme Court, who would like to be in the thick of the battle, but must hang like Prometheus to his legal Caucasus while sharp-beaked attorneys peck at his convictions.

But Powers That Be Fear the Fiery Old Liberal.

as he is affectionately known throughout the length and breadth of the New Deal legal batteries.

Franklin D. Roosevelt has been heard to say that the only man in the world who can give him mental indigestion is Frankfurter. He has the acute problems of the world at his finger-tips and can cover more ground in three hours than the average "superior intellect" can cover in a day. He is a tireless talker and an inexhaustible letter-writer. If Brandeis is a prophet, Frankfurter is a trainer of prophets who has made the Harvard Law School a sort of racing stable for liberal lawyers. One of our greatest teachers of youth, he also has the tact and ability to teach governors and Presidents. He has a keen mind and there are few men in America who can talk more enticingly.

Felix is a comparatively young man, only six months younger than Roosevelt, and he has the same youthful zest and keen sense of humor which are hard to reconcile with the fulsome fifties. He, more than any other one person, is the legal master mind of the New Deal, although he is in large part only the transmitter of the apostolic succession of Louis D. Brandeis. Like Brandeis, he can not watch the game without putting his hands on the board.

Frankfurter was born in Vienna and was not brought to the United States until he was 12 years old. He studied at the College of the City of New York and Harvard Law School, graduating from the latter with academic laurels in 1906. He made his legal debut as Assistant United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York, retaining office for four years during the Administrations of Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft. In 1911 he moved on to Washington as law officer for the Bureau of Insular Affairs, in the War Department, holding over during the first stage of the Wilson Administration until 1914, when he returned to Harvard as professor of law. During the war he came back to Washington again, serving as assistant to the Secretary of War and later as assistant to the Secretary of Labor, as counsel of the President's mediation commission and chairman of the War Labor Policies Board. After the war he resumed his academic career at Harvard Law School, where he has remained ever since.

Frankfurter's Mind Leaps Problems Nimbly.

The long-range technique of breaking down the Brandeis antipathy of the New Deal has been applied by Prof. Frankfurter, dr Felix, Roosevelt and its system of justice from within. He has always been friendly to labor and the cause of social justice, but like Roosevelt, conceals the true force of his character behind an unquenchable sense of humor and a merry manner. He is another Brandeis who wears plus fours instead of the conventional prophet's robes.

Stands Firm on Side Of Social Justice.

He fits in beautifully with the Roosevelt technique for fighting Brandeis with fire. Frankfurter knows the Government of the United States and its system of justice from within. He has always been friendly to labor and the cause of social justice, but like Roosevelt, conceals the true force of his character behind an unquenchable sense of humor and a merry manner. He is another Brandeis who wears plus fours instead of the conventional prophet's robes.

His legal writings are compact and illuminating. He is the author of books on cases under the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Oregon Hours of Labor Case, the District of Columbia Minimum Wage Cases. He helped Roscoe Pound edit "Criminal Justice in Cleveland" and with James M. Landis (now Federal Trade Commissioner) he wrote "The Business of the Supreme Court," which emphasized the fact that the court's attention is now virtually monopolized by determining economic rather than legal issues. He was one of the leaders in the heartrending, skull-cracking legal battle to save Sacco and Vanzetti from the Massachusetts electric chair, and he wrote a book about it.

Marginal Land Purchase Aids Public, Is Claim

Society Relieved of Burden of Feeding Poor by U. S. Retirement Plan.

(Editor's note: This is the fourth of a series by the Associated Press on the plans of the Government to use land to be bought and retired from agricultural production).

One of the most violent objections raised against present Government plans for buying farm land and using it for timber, game and fur production is that it will be removed from taxation and thus cut down the income of States and counties.

The men behind the program reply, "most of this land is already tax-delinquent and of no income value to States or counties. It would be far better to buy it, eliminate the competition of its products with those of better acres, and relieve counties and States of the expense of feeding people on it and providing them with an expensive system of roads and schools," they continue.

Midwestern County Cited.

A Midwestern county which has been studied as an example of poor land in a rich area was found to have one consolidated school district, 5 school townships, 7 urban independent school districts and 61 rural independent school districts taking care of 3,274 children at a total cost of $160,587 annually. It has several hundred miles of roads, much of them running through acreage considered sub-marginal. The roads must be maintained at county expense.

In contrast, a ready market exists for timber which can be grown on are areas, according to President Rosevelt's wild life restoration committee. Likewise a tremendous demand exists among sportsmen for game birds and animals, which could be produced in abundance, and for fur-bearing animals.

Such income could be supplemented by the sale of products from wood-working shops and other small industries in subsistence communities.

It has been estimated that an area of 3,000 such acres would produce $1,125 cash income the first year from game, fur and timber; at the end of five years, $3,500 per year, and in 15 years, $5,000. Total income over a 30-year period was estimated at $117,225. The entire 228,480 acres would accommodate about 76 of the proposed 3,000-acre units.

Big Probable Return.

The probable return from the entire acreage is estimated at $8,909,100 for the 30-year period. Of this sum $4,977,200 would be spent in establishing families in subsistence homeseads, providing them with schools, churches and other facilities.

In addition, $3,884,160 would be spent in wages, for trees and other plants to be set out, and for building erosion-control dams.

Thus at the end of the 30 years the area is expected to show a net profit of about $47,640 above all costs. J. N. Darling, member of the restoration committee, emphasized that these figures were only tentative, but added that they were indicative of the possible returns and were conservative estimates.

tendent of the Ninth Street Wharf, where bricks manufactured at the workhouse are received and distributed.

He declared he had learned of an excursion from the prison by Edmund D. Rheem and G. Bryan Pitts, both convicted in investment scandals here.

Stein, who has almost a Nation-wide reputation for the capture of escaped prisoners, declared that he got the information from a colored "stool-pigeon" called "Ladybug."

On an appointment one night in the winter of 1932, Stein said, he met the informer at the wrestling matches at Washington Auditorium.

Prisoner at Matches.

Stein was given the information that Rheem and Pitts were at the Alexandria Hotel. He offered "Ladybug" money to divulge the source of his information. He refused, saying he "wouldn't cross up," Stein said. But then, he told Stein that in a few minutes he would see some one whose presence at the matches might verify the information.

Then, Stein declared, he saw Tawse, his wife, son-in-law and a prisoner named Dorsey. The prisoner's presence at the matches was a direct infraction of rules, he said. Ladybug said Rheem and Pitts had come with Tawse and been dropped at the hotel.

Stein said he pressed his informant for the source of the information but could not get it. The informer then volunteered, if Stein would give him a dime, to call the hotel and tell Mrs. Rheem that it was Tawse and that the two men should go down to the lobby at a certain time.

Then, Stein said, "Ladybug" told him that he could get some policemen and trap the two as they waited for Tawse. This was not done, but Stein said that he was pretty well convinced by that time.

Mrs. Pitts Registered.

The next day, Stein said, he went to the hotel and under the pretext of looking for a prisoner, examined the register. Mrs. Pitts' name was on it, he said. The affair was later reported to Capt. Barnard.

Other information given by Stein in regard to the manner of checking bricks at the wharf was of some value to the committee's efforts to determine the facts concerning an alleged one-time shortage of 850,000 bricks.

Col. William L. Peak, present Lorton head, told about the punishment post in the basement of the jail, where he was superintendent for several years before going to Lorton last September.

This post was used to chain prisoners, he said, but denied that it was in any way a torture station. He said men were simply handcuffed with arms behind them. They were given a physician's examination before the punishment and every hour during it, he said.

The recent charge of Representative Shoemaker that a prisoner named Ferguson had been found using drugs last Friday, was denied. Col. Peak said that apparently the man was a mental case. He had been sent to Gallinger Hospital Monday for observation.

"Railroad" Charge Denied.

Shoemaker's charge that prisoners who "knew too much were sent to St. Elizabeths Hospital to get them out of the way, was refuted by Peak. He said all mental cases were first observed at Gallinger Hospital, and that they could not be committed until after a lunacy hearing in District Supreme Court.

Charges that prisoners on the "rental porch" where Rheem, Pitts and others are quartered under "slightly better conditions" paid from $50 to $100 a month was called absurd by the superintendent.

Questioned repeatedly about Pitts, Rheem and certain unnamed gamblers and bootleggers being permitted to leave the reservation, Peak declared that such would be impossible.

Judge Michael Doyle, committee member, repeatedly asked Peak if he had not approached Pitts when the latter was at the jail to give money for the burial of a colored man who was executed.

Peak answered "no" as he did to Judge Doyle's question "Have you knowledge of where Pitts' funds are?"

Peak declared in regard to the funeral of the executed man, Cardoza Bell, that he had heard, merely hearsay, that a colored social worker named Alice Washington had been given money by Pitts to take Bell's body to his home in the South.

New Guards Needed.

Peak said that when the present building projects at the institution are completed 31 new guards, and assistant physician and a resident dentist will be needed.

Asked about immorality, Peak said that all possible steps were taken to stamp it out. He added that the additional guards would help.

J. L. Dawson, a resident of Prince William County, Va., said it was frequently gossiped in the "cracker barrel" conversations of the local general stores that unnecessary equipment was purchased at Lorton. He mentioned specifically a brick cutting machine and a condenser.

John R. Selecman, superintendent of the workhouse brick factory, told the committee that the brick cutter was purchased despite the fact that he had advised that the present one was adequate.

Selecman, who has been employed at the institution for 23 years, when asked if he had ever been approached and offered money to recommend the purchase of equipment, replied that about 20 years ago a man made him such an offer, but he refused.

Hunter C. Allen, an employe at the workhouse, told the committee that prisoners returned after escaping wear leg irons. These irons are light and merely keep the men from running, he said.

Another employe, Norman S. Lambert, also testified.

much, especially when to this must be added the $2 tax, Mr. Roosevelt said no consideration had been given to lowering the duty.

The domestic distillers who did not apply in time for permits consist chiefly of old liquor manufacturers, with small plants in Kentucky and Tennessee. Their admission to the American market would mean an additional 44,000,000-gallon annual output, based on 24-hour capacity.

Temporary Remedy.

Concerning the quota system, which is illustrative of the Administration's foreign trade policy, as embodied in the pending tariff bill, it was emphasized that its abandonment was only for a temporary period. Apparently, the Administration recognizes its first import quotas have been too sparing to assure cheap prices.

At the start, the FACA fixed quotas in accordance with a four-month average of the years 1910-14, just before prohibition. It was soon apparent that this was not enough, however, and the initial allocation of 12,837,244 gallons was increased by 8,070,361 gallons for the second quota period, ended April 30.

This second quota, covering the last two months of the first import period, was set by representatives of the State and Agriculture Departments in negotiation with foreign countries to promote the sale of agricultural surpluses abroad. Meanwhile, restrictions were lifted on rye, bourbon and other American-type liquor made in Canada, to enable distillers to improve their blends.

Permit Requests Multiply.

When applications were asked for the second import period the FACA was swamped with 1,217 requests for permits. Even when reduced to 774, the total number of applications receiving favorable action exceeded by more than 170 the total for the first permit period, which was for the full four months.

The supplemental applications for the second period asked for 49,840,006 gallons, far more than had been expected. Although this undoubtedly gives some indication of the latent demand for imports, still the actual amount to be imported during the unrestricted period after May 1 is expected to be between 20,000,000 and 25,000,000 gallons, which, however, would still be considerably more than the amount imported so far.

Senate Chief For Whitney's Control Plan

Robinson Hits Pending Bill for Exchange Regulation.

said he would discuss details in the speech at Newport News.

The Fletcher-Rayburn bill as now drawn would give the Federal Trade Commission supreme and wide discretionary power over stock exchanges. Richard Whitney, president of the New York Exchange, speaking for the board of governors of that body, strenuously objected to this phase of the bill.

He proposed the creation by Congress of a seven-man board to be known as the "Stock Exchange Coordinating Authority." He suggested as members the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, two persons to be named by the President, one to be named by the Open Market Committee of the Federal Reserve System, and two to be selected by the stock exchanges.

Senator Robinson said the Federal bill should eliminate practices and abuses "generally recognized as inconsistent with sound and honest business," which, he added, did not mean "that all forms of speculation will be outlawed." He said the Federal action should "supplement" State laws to protect innocent investors from plunder by racketeers.

Publicity Urged.

"The surest corrective that can be found is publicity," asserted Senator Robinson, referring to stock market evils and abuses. "Publish the facts, forbid secret arrangements to manipulate the market; impose reasonable and increased marginal requirements and create a new agency, in the membership of which the public will be fairly and ably represented to pass judgment on the rules and regulations as well as the practices indulged in on exchange; clarify and strengthen the law pertaining to the transmittal of false information through the mails and a long advance will be made in the right direction.

"No officer, agent or person should be penalized for or prevented from supplying truthful information. Every broker should be compelled to make full disclosures to his customers. Stockholders should be encouraged to exercise their rights under the law and fools should be warned to keep off the exchanges."

A little further on, Senator Robinson warned that "the one thing which we must take is prudent precaution not to do anything which will create a panicky state of mind among investors, which would be followed quickly by wholesale liquidation to the ruin of the innocent and the unsuspecting.

"Another object to be kept in mind," he continued, "is to so regulate the exchanges as to enable them to afford a broad and ready market rather than drive investors to foreign exchanges. Nothing the Government can do will protect reckless and unwise investors against loss, but it can impose safeguards against frauds and unfairness."

Senator Robinson also dwelled at length on the reciprocal tariff bill, reiterating much of what he said in his address to the Senate earlier in the week. He argued that granting authority to the President to raise or lower tariff rates within 50 per cent was a valid, Constitutional delegation of power and, from the viewpoint of public policy, would be a "beneficial" step.

Netherlands Navy Captain Dismissed

Commander of Mutinous Crew Held Reckless.

The Hague, March 9 (AP).—The last act in the drama in which the Dutch cruiser De Zeven Provincien was seized by mutineers off Sumatra a year ago, today resulted in a sentence of four months' imprisonment and dismissal from service upon Capt. Eikenboom, the cruiser's commander.

The sentence followed court-martial proceedings in which Capt. Eikenboom was charged with "unpardonable recklessness" in connection with the affair.

While the captain was ashore, 400 sailors seized the vessel, overpowering eight officers. They were pursued for five days by airplanes, submarines and destroyers before being captured. A number of the crew are serving prison terms.

Revised Mail Bill Is Facing Senate Fight

House Clash Averted as Democrats Force Adjournment.

been heard. Fess said he should be "heard again."

The debate waxed particularly bitter when Fess was asked why Brown, if he was so innocent, had burned his office records. Fess countered with the statement that the witness who had testified to the burning had "been forced to say that."

Black's Ire Aroused.

Black, getting madder by the minute, drew from Fess that this statement had been made by Brown, and not by the witness, and added that he had an affidavit from the witness to the effect that he had never made such a charge.

The witness referred to was James Maher, a Postoffice Department stenographer, who, until recently was receiving $25 a month from the Democratic National Committee.

"A man employed by the Democratic National Committee would do a thing like that," shouted Fess.

A long, and acrimonious dispute then arose between Fess and Black over the testimony offered by various witnesses before Black's committee. The two Senators took the same evidence and, by interpretation, used it as either Democratic or Republican material.

Fess then launched into charges of mail tampering and the use of dictaphones, citing correspondence he had with Brown and also long-distance telephone conversations he has had recently with the former Postoffice head, which he said had been interfered with.

Black offered to join him in a thorough investigation of such charges.

The dispute ended with the introduction of a letter by Fess from his son, Lehr, who has been identified before the committee as Washington representative of an air line. Young Fess denied that he attended the 1930 "spoils conferences."

Fess Hurt by Involving Son.

The Senator pointed out that he had been profoundly hurt to have his son's name and his own "involved like this in the headlines."

The McKellar-Black bill, on which hearings before the Senate Postoffice Committee will begin next week, is even more drastic than at first was expected. Although some changes in rates may be made, the general opinion is that, as the Administration bill, it will leave the commtitee in much the same form it now bears.

Under its provisions no officer or director "who has heretofore entered into any combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails" could be connected with the companies seeking contracts under its provisions.

It would further limit officers' salaries to $17,500, and would not permit bids from any company "who owns, or, in turn, is owned, in whole or in part, by any other company, engaged directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry, whether the other company be a holding company, or a company transporting mail or holding a mail contract, or a company engaged in the manufacture or sale of airplanes, airplane parts, or other materials or accessories generally used in air transportation."

This would entail complete reorganization by most of the companies who held contracts until February 9 if they wished to rebid for their cancelled routes.

Would Bar Mergers.

It would be unlawful for companies holding one of the three transcontinental routes to hold any other contract or for two lines, operating parallel routes, to merge or combine. The Postmaster Genral would be allowed to grant only one route extension, not to exceed 100 miles, to each company.

It would supplant the present law by making competitive bidding the basis upon which all bids would be let "to the lowest responsible bidders tendering sufficient guarantee for faithful performance." The present law permits the substitution for contracts of route certificates without bidding, and for liberal extensions.

The bill in its present form would fix rates not to exceed 30 cents per airplane mile for the first 300 pounds and a maximum of 6 cents a mile for each additional 200 pounds, with a total maximum of 40 cents a mile.

At the end of three years, the Interstate Commerce Commission would determine the "public convenience and necessity for all air mail routes and the fair and reasonable future rates of compensation."

This would leave the Postmaster General only with the power to determine where he wanted the air mail carried.

The bill would provide a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment of not more than five years for "whoever shall enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mail under this act, or shall make any agreement or give or perform or promise to give or perform any consideration whatever to induce any other person or concern not to bid for any contract."

Pan-American Airways, whose foreign air-mail contracts were not canceled last month, would not be affected by the bill until its present contracts are terminated, since the provisions would determine only conditions on which new contracts are to be let.

Methuen, Mass. (U.P.).—To discourage petters, Police Chief Cyril Feugill warned that police would photograph all couples found in parked cars by the roadside.

The antidote has proved surprisingly effective. A week after the announcement, not a single picture had been taken.

"The weather's been cold, I know," mused the chief, "but even on the coldest nights we used to run across a few petters."

Agriculture Proponents Draw Cards in Big AAA Jackpot

the Administration wanted only cotton and wheat listed as basic commodities. Those were the two big crops. It was interested only in big surplus crops. And they wanted to handle the reduction on a voluntary basis.

But forces have been let loose which are tending to sweep the whole experiment out of control, in the opinion of many Republicans and a less vocal sprinkling of Democrats. These forces were strong enough even before the AAA bill was passed, to compel Congress to write in corn, hogs, rice, tobacco and milk as basic commodities.

Wallace Has Misgivings.

Now they are moving to add numerous others. Likewise, the pressure was strong enough, once the voluntary control principle was put into effect, to follow it up with the compulsory plan which Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has accepted with many misgivings solely because a majority of the cotton farmers appeared to demand it.

These Frankenstein tendencies are what cause apprehensions and lead Secretary Wallace to demand in increasingly stronger terms that the United States decide quickly whether it is going to attempt to be a self-contained Nation which would require drastic regimentation of agriculture, or to try to seek some middle ground as a normal trader in the world markets.

House Republican Leader Snell sounded a call yesterday for opposition to the Bankhead cotton bill.

"It is just another move toward State collectivism," he said. "The next thing probably will be wheat; the next thing, dairy products, and, before you get through, you will have every agricultural commodity and every industry under the Federal Government.

"First, they come in here and ask for temporary authority, assuring us they intend only to meet an emergency. Then, once they get a foothold, they come back and ask for permanent authority to continue their nostrums.

"They ask for criticism, but they don't want it, and the first time anybody says anything unfavorable, they crack him in the head.

Snell Off the Record.

"The country is going to wake up pretty soon and find that the Government has gone so far toward State collectivism that it will have a hard time to get back."

By this time Representative Snell was pretty mad and he went off the record.

Some of the peanut Senators don't like the jokes that were cracked when they were trying to make a basic commodity out of goobers. Senator Neely (Democrat), West Virginia, grinning at the peanut champions, said that if the production of peanuts was going to be restricted he hoped that some way would be found to keep any more nuts from getting into the Senate.

Senator Bailey (Democrat), North Carolina, explained that it was no laughing matter because peanut growers in 17 of his counties are threatened with new competition from farmers who have signed up to reduce cotton and tobacco acreage. These farmers are about to plant peanuts, with the danger of ruining a big industry by overproduction. Already, peanut acreage is four times that of sugar beets. Although rice is a basic commodity, there are only 9,000 rice farms, as against 326,000 planted in peanuts.

"Farmer producers of peanuts are under necessity of self-preservation to demand of this Government that it shall throw around them the same protection it throws around farmers who are producing other crops," Bailey said during debate earlier this week. "Since the Government has gone into this business, necessity and justice demand that it go all the way or retrace its steps."

Acreage Loopholes.

Department of Agriculture experts say that cotton and tobacco acreage restriction contracts prohibit the farmers from planting the idle land in commercial crops. But they are getting around that by using such idle land for seed and home consumption crops, thus releasing other ground to be planted without restriction.

Secretary Wallace says that this situation makes it necessary to take definite steps to discourage expansion of peanut acreage this year and that by declaring them a basic commodity, the AAA will have more latitude in dealing with the problem.

caped with minor bruises and shock when the bombing plane in which they were flying mail to Miami crashed a few minutes after taking off in a heavily wooded section. Marshall suffered a broken arm and bruises.

The plane, en route from Jacksonville to Miami, had stopped here to discharge and take on mail. Taking off, motor trouble developed, and the ship fell about 2 miles from the city. It had been unable to gain altitude.

Four sacks of mail were transferred to the postoffice here.

What caused the accident was not disclosed.

883 Counties Report Lots, Cash Available Despite Lumber Costs.

(Associated Press.)

John H. McClure, chief of the division of costs and prices of the lumber code authority, said yesterday there are more than 300,000 prospective small home builders in the United States despite the great increase of lumber prices since last year.

A questionnaire sent by the National Lumber Manufacturers Association to retail lumbermen throughout the country, brought replies from 883 counties in the 48 States showing that these prospective builders have either lots or cash, or both, and are awaiting only adequate financing to start building.

Also awaiting moderate and conservative financing, McClure said, are projects involving 236,000 farm buildings and 35,000 small business structures, in addition to thousands of remodelling and repair jobs.

McClure said Government confirmation of "this desire to build and remodel" comes from the farm housing survey of the Civil Works Administration. First reports from the survey showed that farmers in Virginia and Oklahoma were ready to build when proper financing is available.

Crisis Solved

Business Doctor Tells How He Ends Depression.

Baltimore, March 9 (AP).—Edward McClure, who said he recently has added business doctoring to his regular lines of soothsaying and faith healing, today revealed to a United States District Court his secret for putting new life into depressed business.

From the owner of the business, he said, he got 26 quarters. These he scattered on the floor of the sickly concern's oce. Then he sprinkled salt, burned incense, went through the proper formula of word and deed, and finally swept salt, bad luck and quarters into a little flannel bag, which he carried away to burn.

"I guess it didn't work so well sometimes," he admitted. "Some places it had to be done several times."

McClure was a witness in a non-magic case, but upon learning his business, curious lawyers drew forth his secret.

Dazed Bidders Discover NRA Contradictory

Efforts to Land Federal Contracts Is Ticklish Business Today.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

No matter how a business man bids on a Government contract, it developed yesterday, he gets himself into hot water.

If he conforms to NRA codes, the Government may charge him with collusion and fraud. If he scorns the Blue Eagle, another section of the Government may prosecute him for violation of the National industrial recovery act.

This paradoxical situation has reached such a pass that Charles Garvin, leading manufacturer of commercial stationery, has refused to do business with the Government. The Government itself, he thinks, should be investigated. C. Ellis Ellicott, jr., maker of excavating machinery, says it looks to him as though the other Government departments "are thumbing their noses" at Gen. Hugh S. Johnson's NRA. The Federal Government alone is not at fault, says E. A. Keeley, producer of business furniture. He claims that business men are in a dilemma whenever they negotiate with any of the hundreds of thousands of State, county, municipal and semipublic agencies.

Claim Laws Conflict.

The impasse outlined by complaining business men is a complicated one, based upon the premise that Congress apparently has enacted conflicting laws. One law says the Government, when buying anything, must accept the lowest responsible bid. The other law, creating the NRA, provides for adoption of codes of fair competition. These codes frequently include the posting of open price lists.

Now then, consider the hypothetical case of the War Department buying some ditch-digging machinery.

If all the machinery makers are operating under the code of fair competition their prices will have been known to each other, and in all likelihood their bids to the War Department will be identical to the fraction. That heretofore has been considered prima facie evidence of fraud and collusion. The War Department is empowered under the law to prosecute such cases.

If some of the machinery makers flout the Blue Eagle, however, and pay wages lower than code levels, their bids naturally will be low. The lowest will get the business. The law provides that low bidders shall win, but the other law, meantime, lays him open to prosecution for violating the NRA.

Always in Quandary.

Testimony before Gen. Johnson's code revision conferences indicates that every time a business man bids he jumps from the frying pan into the fire. Every time he ignores the codes, witnesses charge further, he jumps from the arms of the devil into the deep blue sea.

If these facts held only in the case of the Federal Government, according to Keeley, the problem would not be so serious, but he claims that all other governing groups in the United States follow similar practices in opening bids.

There are 3,080 counties in the United States, thousands of cities and towns, and a growing list of semipublic agencies, including the Red Cross and the Federal Reserve Banks, which claim the right to award business contracts to the lowest bidder.

Keeley and other business leaders insist that this Government practice of accepting sealed bids is a powerful wedge in the possible wrecking of the NRA. This is so, they contend, because the governmental bodies have been the principal purchasers of durable goods in America since the depression began.

2 More Nations Refuse Insull

Bulgaria and Rumania Deny Entry as Greece Delays Expulsion.

Athens, Greece, March 9 (AP).—While the Greek government today encountered another of its many delays to rid the country of Samuel Insull, sr., the fugitive continued efforts to gain entry to some country to the north.

Physicians who made another examination of the former utilities magnate's health made their report to Minister of the Interior Metaxas, who said it would not be published until tomorrow.

A local newspaper claimed to have reliable information that the doctors suggested Insull could travel without danger to his health on a luxury liner.

Two countries to the north, Bulgaria and Rumania, added their refusals to that of Hungary to grant visas.

The British Legation has been instructed not to issue a visa to Insull, a native of Englnad, who, if he retruns to America, must face trial in Chicago on chiminal charges growing from the collapse of his utility companies.

Terrell Won't Aid Opening of House Cafe to Colored

Representative George B. Terrell (Democrat), Texas, yesterday notified Representative Oscar De Priest (Republican), Illinois, that he would give no help to the De Priest campaign to open the House restaurant to colored persons, according to the Associated Press.

Terrell said he had received from De Priest a copy of a form letter, presumably sent to all House members, in which De Priest asked help to force out of committee his resolution calling upon the House restaurant to serve members of his race.

other words, they feel that they are entitled to a "new deal" in their own organization.

One of these is Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, who, however, is not noted for his party regularity.

"Under the most favorable circumstances," Nye said yesterday, "the Republican party is going to find a comeback difficult. If it is to come back there must be a change of leadership, from the party chairman down."

Looks to West.

He expressed the opinion that the party's only hope for making inroads in the Democratic majorities in Congress lies in the Middle and Far West.

"Its complacency during the hours of grave economic changes has left the party with an exceedingly difficult path before it," Nye said. "The party can not say that the Democratic Administration is wrong, and on that ground alone expect the people to abandon this Administration when their only alternative finds the Mellon-Mills picture, and their kind of indifference to public need staring them in the face."

Asked whether he thought former Senator James E. Watson, of Indiana, would be a good Republican chairman, Nye said the party "could do worse."

"I agree with Nye," Watson said when interviewed by the Associated Press in Indianapolis, "that the party could do worse than selecting me as chairman."

Watson said he was in a receptive mood; in fact, that he would like to be chairman. He added that he did not expect to be a candidate for any office in the coming election. It had been reported that he might run for Congress.

Sees House Victories.

Watson, however, painted no glowing picture of the future of the party. He said he doubted whether the party would be able to elect any new members of the Senate, and that it would be fortunate to reelect all those now holding seats. He was more optimistic about the House, however. He predicted that at least 75 Democrats would be replaced by Republicans this fall.

The terms of 17 Republican Senators and 14 Democratic Senators expire next year. Most of them will be candidates for reelection this fall.

The Republicans are Austin, Vermont; Cutting, New Mexico; Fess, Ohio; Frazier, North Dakota; Goldsborough, Maryland; Hale, Maine; Hatfield, West Virginia; Hebert, Rhode Island; Johnson, California; Kean, New Jersey; La Follette, Wisconsin; Patterson, Missouri; Reed, Pennsylvania; Robinson, Indiana; Townsend, Delaware; Vandenberg, Michigan, and Walcott, Connecticut.

The Democrats are Ashurst, Arizona; Byrd, Virginia; Connally, Texas; Copeland, New York; Dill, Washington; King, Utah; McKellar, Tennessee; O'Mahoney, Wyoming; Pittman, Nevada; Stephens, Mississippi; Thompson, Nebraska; Trammell, Florida; Walsh, Massachusetts, and Wheeler, Montana.

The term of Senator Shipstead (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, also expires.

Decatur, Ala., March 9 (AP).—A new effort for a retrial of Heywood Patterson and Clarence Norris, two of nine young Negroes under death sentence in the "Scottsboro case," was denied by Judge W. W. Callahan in Morgan court today.

employes who had been involved in the strike should not take part in the election, though other former strikers were allowed to cast their votes. The election was scheduled for yesterday, but late Thursday Gen. Johnson took the case into his own hands, presumably because of the restrictions against the 800. Davis thereupon postponed it.

Labor Poll Held.

The company went ahead with the poll as originally scheduled. Mr. Davis thereupon issued a statement to the effect that "the compliance director has not been informed about any details of the alleged poll taken in the Budd plant today. When he is, that information will be laid before Gen. Johnson."

Reporters called on the compliance director for explanation. "That case is out of my hands," said Mr. Davis. "I haven't any plan at all. I don't know what the General will do."

He admitted that he had no representatives present when the poll was taken at the plant yesterday.

Mr. Davis revealed that though the Administration's aim was to decentralize enforcement whenever possible, it had taken steps for the cooperation of Blackwell Smith and the Department of Justice to handle the present situation.

Asked whether removong the Blue Eagle from a noncomplier had been found to be an effective method of enforcement, he replied:

"You bet your life it has! Every day we get appications for restoration of the Blue Eagle. They're willing to do anything to get them back. Loft & Co. paid $30,000 or $40,000 in back wages to their employes to get their Blue Eagle back."

Treasury 'Gold' Robber Turns To Rum Stores

Beautiful Bottles Are Stolen, Filled, Alas, With Water.

Police were trying to learn yesterday whether a man who heaved a brick through a liquor store window and stole eight beautifully labeled bottles containing colored water is the same man who robbed the Treasury Department of five beautiful "gold bricks" made of iron.

The bottles of water were taken from the Ben Franklin liquor store, Seventeenth and K streets northwest. Robert J. Franklin, proprietor, said he wouldn't take chances by putting real liquor in the window.

Thieves fared better when they smashed a window in a drug store at 906 Seventeenth street northwest and escaped with 15 pints of liquor, 5 quarts of wine and a quart of rum. The total value of their haul was estimated by Le Fay Corwin, owner, at $39.

One man was arrested before another shattered window—that of Albany Pharmacy, at Seventeenth and H streets northwest, which thieves had smashed with a "no parking" sign. Frightened by an approaching scout car, the robbers obtained no loot.

Aircraft Lightning Hazard Slight, Asserts Air Council

Advisory Group Finds Proper Construction Protects Ships.

Flying aircraft are in little or no danger of damage or destruction by lightning, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics reported to the Navy Department yesterday. Experts working for the committee made an investigation of the subject following destruction of the dirigible Akron a year ago.

The committee found that "hazards to aircraft due to lightning are very slight." This was taken to indicate that the experts believe the Akron, an airship presenting a high degree of internal protection against the effects of lightning, was not destroyed by electrical discharges in the storm in which it went down.

The report states that in an airship protection from lightning is greater, "the closer the meshes of the metallic framework, the wire bracing and the wire nettings inclosing the gas bags, and particularly the more highly electrically conducting the surface of the outer envelope."

A special subcommittee appointed by Chairman Joseph S. Ames, consisting of recognized authorities, agreed that "it is possible, without serious complication, to render an airplane practically immune to serious danger either to the airplane or to the occupants."

This is accomplished by a process known as "bonding" or linking together of all the metal parts so that they may become conductors of electric current.

Commander Charles E. Rosendahl, former airship commander, now stationed "at sea" with the U. S. S. Portland, stated recently that he believed the Akron "went down in a detectable and avoidable storm."

He further concluded that it was not the storm that sent the ship to its fate, but that she was destroyed by contact with the ocean. "The Akron was literally maneuvered," he said, "into the sea and crushed in an element that she had never been designed to operate in."

Although neither airships nor airplanes of proper construction are in much danger from lightning, the report concludes, both should make every effort to avoid thunderstorms—keeping out of the "exceedingly violent and extremely turbulent winds of thunderstorms, which cause great danger of destruction."

Members of the subcommittee of the N. A. C. A. were Dr. Charles F. Marvin, Weather Bureau, chairman; Dr. L. J. Briggs, Bureau of Standards; Commander Garland Fulton, U. S. N.; Dr. W. J. Humphreys, Weather Bureau; Dr. J. C. Hunsaker, Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Dr. F. B. Silsbee, Bureau of Standards; Prof. John B. Whitehead, Johns Hopkins University; Dr. G. W. Lewis, N. A. Backs Tariff Plan

A. WILLIS ROBERTSON, Representative from the former Seventh Virginia District, who is supporting President Roosevelt's request for tariff-making authority.

Tariff Proposal Best Farm Aid, Robertson Says

Virginia Representative Supports Plan With "Enthusiasm."

Lexington, Va., March 9 (Spl.).—Representative A. Willis Robertson, of Lexington, is "supporting with enthusiasm" President Roosevelt's request for tariff-making authority, he says in a letter to a constituent.

"A change in tariff policy with a view to regaining our foreign markets holds, in my opinion, the best hope for permanent relief for our farmers, and in this program I believe that the agricultural interest of the South and West will be united," Representative Robertson wrote to W. G. Ellison, of Waynesboro.

"* * * I am pleased to advise you that I am supporting with enthusiasm the proposal of the President to give him authority to regulate tariff schedules in connection with his plan for the negotiation of reciprocal trade agreements," he continued.

"Our district, as you know, is the largest exporter of apples of any similar area in the United States. About 60 per cent of the dark-fired tobacco grown in Virginia is for export market. The domestic price for both wheat and beef cattle is determined by our ability to export an unconsumable surplus. It naturally follows that agriculture is very dependent upon foreign markets.

"Nothing that Congress has done in recent years has hurt the agricultural interests of Virginia more than the passage of the Hawley-Smoot tariff. There is absolutely no hope for relief from the iniquitous provisions of that tariff through the rewriting of tariff rates by Congress. Our only hope is in President Roosevelt. The Republican leaders are determined that this bill shall not pass and will fight us to the last ditch."

"Cheap" Dollar Killed Inflation Robinson Says

Majority Leader Speaks in Virginia; Lauds Tariff Proposal.

Newport News, Va., March 9 (AP).—Senator Robinson, majority leader of the Senate, declared here tonight that the "danger of reckless and uncontrolled inflation" had been averted by dollar revaluation and enlargement of the credit base through heavy gold imports.

Addressing the Chamber of Commerce, the Arkansas Senator said there were "numerous evidences" to support the belief that general business conditions are improving.

He upheld the Constitutionality and necessity of the Administration's reciprocal tariff bill, but differed with Chairman Fletcher, of the Banking Committee, in advocating a new agency to regulate stock exchanges instead of giving this job to the Federal Trade Commission.

"The surest corrective that can be found is publicity," he said with reference to the stock exchange proposal.

The Senator said the time limitation on the President's power to change tariff rates under the proposed bill brought the legislation clearly within the Constitution.

The history of tariff-making by Congress was "marred by shameful abuses for which the public has had to pay very dearly," he said.

"If reciprocal tariff arrangements may not become effective until they have been ratified as separate treaties by the Senate, we had just as well abandon all thought of employing the principle of mutual concessions in building up our commerce," he added.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Blackie Bear Goes Fishing

ONE day when Blackie was scouting around over the country, he came across a great wide place in the creek—so wide that he called it a lake, and he said he knew there were plenty of fishes in it. So the next morning after having the trouble with Daddy Gander, he fixed up a good lunch, got his hooks and lines and things together, and started out for the big willow tree that he had seen near a deep hole in the lake.

What do you reckon was on his hook? A catfish.

When he got to the fishing hole, he hung his lunch basket up on a limb to keep the ants out, and then he cut a pole and tied his line to it, dug up some worms to bait his hook with, lit his pipe and settled down on a big root for a day's fishing. It wasn't long before he got a bite, and when he pulled his hook up, what do you reckon was on it? A catfish! These fishes are called catfish because they have a head that looks a good deal like a cat, and they have whiskers like a cat.

Cat Not Wanted.

Do you reckon Blackie wanted to see anything that looked like a cat, after that scratching that Sallie Cat gave him? He did not, and he started to throw his hook and line, fish and all, back into the water, and then run for home, but then he saw that the fish didn't have any claws, and so he took him off of the hook and put him in his basket.

Blackie had pretty good luck, and he caught a dozen or so nice fishes, besides the catfish, before lunch time, and he put them all on his string and hung it up on a limb. It must be about lunch time, for the sun was right up above his head, and, too, he was hungry, and so he took his lunch down and sat down on a log and ate it all up. Then, just as he always does after dinner, he scratched up a pile of leaves for a bed and laid down for a nap. Sometimes people sleep off their troubles, and sometimes they sleep themselves into trouble, and this was Blackie's day to sleep into it.

While Blackie was catching all those fishes, Jocko Monkey, a big ourang-outang, was sitting in his house away up in the big willow tree, and he was peeping through the leaves and watching Blackie.

Is Sound Sleeper.

It takes a lot of noise to wake Blackie when he is napping after a good lunch, and Jocko Monkey didn't make a lot of noise when he came down from his tree to get Blackie's fishes. And he didn't make a lot of noise while he was eating them, nor while he was laying the bones on the ground all around Blackie's mouth. And he didn't make a lot of noise when he picked up a stick and climbed back up his tree and out on a limb right over Blackie. But he would tell you today that Blackie made a lot of noise when that stick slipped down through the leaves and popped him right on the jaw. Yes, sir, Blackie jumped up and yelled "Woof" three times before you could say "Jack Robinson," and he looked around to see who hit him. No, there wasn't anybody in sight, but the thing seemed curious. But look at those bones all around where his head had been lying! Did he eat those fishes while he was asleep? He didn't believe it. He couldn't taste fish in his mouth. And it WAS scary. No, there wasn't a track around, but somebody had eaten all his fishes. I'll go tell Dr. Coon about it, that's what I'll do," he said, and he gathered up his things and hurried off through the woods.

Dr. Coon smelled Blackie's breath and looked at his tongue, and then told him that he certainly hadn't eaten any fish. "Where did you go to sleep, anyway?" Dr. Coon asked Blackie.

"Under the big willow tree down by the lake," Blackie answered.

And then Dr. Coon laughed hard. "Didn't you know that Jocko Monkey lives in that tree?" the Doctor asked. "Jocko likes fish."

The Senate concurred.

He said the State and city police officers were able, efficient and loyal and were doing their best with the equipment they had. He said criminals were being driven out of big cities and were coming into Virginia.

Virginia Group Passes Budget Of $82,000,000

Senator John W. Rust Leads Fight Against Pay Increases.

By Doug Warrenfels.

Richmond, March 9.—Despite sharp protest from Senator John W. Rust, Fairfax, the Senate tonight passed the $82,000,000 budget bill by 32 to 7.

Rust protested against adoption of numerous amendments calling for salary increases. He insisted pay raises were not justified by economic conditions.

"No action of the Senate during this session will cause so much adverse criticism as the increase of these salaries," he declared. "I want to go on record as opposing them most vigorously. I believe it a great and grievous mistake, and it will not meet with the approval of the taxpayers."

Salary Increases Voted.

Annual compensation increases voted included State Capitol watchmen, $200 each; State Capitol elevator operators, $200 each; State law librarian, $600; secretary of the Commonwealth, $500; commissioner of labor, $1,000; superintendent of public instruction, $1,000; State treasurer, $1,000; State director of motor vehicles, $1,000, and State director of research and statute drafting, $500.

In addition, the bill was amended to permit employment of a new clerk in the State Library at $1,200 a year.

The Senate concurred in a House amendment appropriating $125,000 for erection of a new building at the Staunton State School for the Deaf and Blind to relieve crowded conditions.

Observers predicted that some of the salary increases might be killed at a prospective conference between members of the Senate and House.

The House passed by 87 to 9 a Senate measure designed to place Commonwealth attorneys, revenue commissioners and treasurers in localities on salaries instead of fees.

Fight On Added Pay.

Delegate E. O. McCue, jr., Charlottesville, led an unsuccessful fight against a provision granting expenses as well as salaries to the officials.

Delegate J. T. Coleman, jr., Nelson, offered an amendment to prevent payment of an additional salary of $3,000 a year to the chairman of a board to consider fixing salaries of the officials involved. His proposal to require that all compensation board members be State officials and serve without additional pay was defeated, 50 to 47.

Reports persisted that E. R. Coombs, at present manager of the Richmond district, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, was slated to return as State comptroller and become chairman of the wage board at a combined salary of $9,000.

The administration's $1,211,000 tax bill received final legislative approval today when the House concurred in the single amendment added by the Senate.

It states that when freight constitutes 75 per cent of the cost of an article to a merchant, the merchant shall be allowed to deduct freight in totaling sales for taxation. Wilbur C. Hall, patron of the bill, said it affected only coal dealers.

New Effort to Be Made for State Control Measure.

Charleston, W. Va., March 9 (Spl.).—With both houses of the Legislature in recess today, attention was given to a statement by Delegate Rush D. Holt (Democrat), Lewis, that he planned to seek a compromise on the liquor deadlock between the State monopoly bill sponsored by Senator C. E. Hodges, (Democrat), Monongahelia, and the bill for naked repeal fathered by Delegate Benjamin H. Butcher (Democrat), Wood.

Both plans have been defeated in one form or another, but have repeatedly turned up again with some changes of wording. Holt announced that he would introduce a bill based upon a modified plan giving the State power to delegate control to various agencies.

The entire Senate, accompanied by many delegates, went to Ripley today with a State police escort to attend the funeral of Senator Kenna K. Hyre, of the Fourth District, who died two days ago at Parkersburg.

War Contract Graft Charges Slated Monday

District Grand Jury Will Vote on Indictments in Two Deals.

The District grand jury, investigating War Department contracts, yesterday completed its examination of testimony and will vote on the question of indictments Monday morning. It will report some time next week.

The outcome of the case is now completely in the hands of the jury. Assistant United States Attorney David Pine instructed the jury on the questions of law involved and told members they should indict in any case in which they believed a person guilty of a crime, informing them that their duty included only the making of charges and that the final determination of guilt would be in the hands of a trial jury.

Indictment of some of the persons who have been under investigation is expected. Charges are expected to be made under the Federal conspiracy statutes.

The investigation, which has lasted five weeks and which has included the testimony of nearly 50 witnesses, has resolved itself into consideration of two possible conspiracies, one involving the Army's $10,000,000 motorization program and one involving the purchase and sale of surplus Army materials. Some of the persons under investigation are said to have been involved in both deals.

75,000 on June 16 Will Visit St. Marys County 'Ghost City'

Map Now Shows Sites of All Historic Features of Fete Interest.

J. SPENCE HOWARD.

The National spotlight will be turned on St. Marys (Md.), first settlement and Capital, June 16, when President Roosevelt and an estimated 75,000 to 100,000 visitors journey there to attend the greatest celebration of the Free State's tercentenary year.

Known as the "Ghost City," the meadow land there that today covers the historic sites of this old town will be trod by a varied throng. Many will want to know where the ancient Council Chamber, Governor's Castle, the first Catholic Chapel, and famous old Jelly's Tavern once stood. But none of these ancient sites can be located without the aid of a map.

For the first time in 200 years, a complete map has been made, covering 3,000 acres of land at St. Marys City, marking all the public offices, manors, shops and taverns of Leonard Calvert's colonists.

J. Spence Howard, of Baltimore, official engineer and member of the executive committee of the Maryland Tercentenary Commission, himself a descendant of Maryland's first settlers, has spent 23 years in surveys and research to make this map.

In keeping with The Washington Post's policy to give its readers more tercentenary news than any other paper, this map will appear exclusively in tomorrow's issue of The Post, together with an exclusive story by Mr. Howard explaining the map.

Woman and 3 Men Arrested In Theft of Relief Supplies

Martinsburg, W. Va., March 9 (Spl.).—Three Martinsburg men and a county woman were arrested and jailed yesterday in connection with the theft Wednesday of 125 pounds of meat and 30 dozen of eggs, sent by the Federal Government for needy families here.

Those held are Everett Simms, Clarence Simms, John Bowers and Mrs. Lovett Gravely.

The meat and most of the eggs were allegedly recovered at the Everett Simms home here within an hour after the robbery was discovered by John W. Dean, relief dispensing officer. All denied any knowledge of the robbery. Everett Simms claimed a man in an automobile brought the supplies to his home.

Although the meat and eggs were the property of the Federal Government, State police said the case would be handled by county and State authorities.

The Third Dimension.

Dr. William Beebe, whose scientific books have been made endurable by their literary quality, will go to the coast of Nonsuch Island this summer, once more to delve into the ocean's depths in search of aqueous adventure. His quest in his startling submarine ball, the Bathysphere, will thrill many as greatly as Commander Byrd's more physically arduous trials in the ice floes of Little America. (After this winter Byrd's heroism does not seem so wondrous as it did.) But no one has ever gone so deep into oceanological lore as Dr. Beebe and the uniqueness of his dives for the sake of science will keep the eyes of an inquiring world focused in his direction.

This contemplated plunge to heretofore impenetrable depths encourages some modest philosophising. Dr. Beebe goes down; others go up. Bathysphere and stratosphere no longer are mysteries to mankind. The Beebes and Picards see to that. The poles are no longer far apart. Science peeks into everything and nothing is secret any more. But few of us, in our scientific wisdom, are able to go beyond height or depth. We extend the limits of our plane, but stay within it.

Wouldn't the exploration of breadth be a good subject for our educators to insist upon? We acquire knowledge, but breadth is wisdom, and that is not easy to attain. Scientists collect, but it takes a philosopher to interpret. And there seems to be a dearth of philosophers in this growingly scientific world of ours. We know what Beebe sees; but who can tell us what it means?

Patronage And Planning.

The latest instance of the shelving of the merit system is afforded by a proposal to exempt from the civil service law all Federal positions created under the bill to establish a National Labor Board. In this case, there is not even the excuse that the organization is of an emergency nature. Moreover, as the National Civil Service League points out in a timely letter of protest, the registers of the Civil Service Commission contain an unusually large number of names of persons qualified to fill positions on the projected board. The rules are also sufficiently elastic to allow for necessary exceptions.

The present Administration has set up numerous agencies of an emergency nature—some likely to be of long duration. They are seriously handicapped by the system of political patronage which has filled many offices with incompetent hangers-on. The work of these organizations, employing nearly 30,000 persons, is of a character which calls for systematic training in higher officials and careful selection of subordinates. Yet, without exception, these agencies have been permitted to recruit their employes without regard for civil service rules.

The spoils system is at all times inimical to efficiency in government, but it is especially costly and dangerous under present conditions. A Nation which is seemingly dedicated to a "planned economy" certainly can not afford to rely upon politicians to select its civil service on a patronage basis. Here is one direction in which the principles of the New Deal might well be more aggressively pushed.

More Effective Relief.

Commissioner Allen is manifesting a laudable interest in the District's relief problem. His personal inspection of relief agencies and his general study of Washington's welfare organizations should lead to the establishment of a more effective system of caring for indigent and delinquent citizens. It is evident that the Board of Public Welfare is no longer capable of meeting the responsibilities created by widespread unemployment and destitution.

At present relief and welfare activities are carried on under direction of a board of citizens who serve without pay. The director of the Welfare Board is appointed by the District Commissioners, but only upon recommendations from the board. A loose organization of this kind can not be expected to function satisfactorily in an emergency. More positive executive direction seems to be needed, as well as closer attention by the Commissioners themselves. Control over the District's penal institutions, hospitals and welfare agencies is one of the most important functions of municipal government, especially in times like the present.

Commissioner Allen's reorganization plan appears to be sound. While centralizing authority over these institutions in the Commissioners, and making the director immediately responsible to them, he would not dispense with the services of the Board of Public Welfare. It would become an advisory body, a status more in keeping with its character.

Centralization of both responsibility and authority is essential to efficient municipal government. There is no reason why a group of citizens serving without remuneration should stand between the Commissioners and the welfare institutions. Congress ought to endow the Commissioners with whatever authority they need to give the most effective executive direction to relief work in the District.

Live And Let Live.

Three department heads—Secretaries Hull, Roper and Wallace—laid down the opening barrage in favor of the Administration bill authorizing executive alteration of tariff rates within a 50 per cent range. Their testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee on Thursday was followed yesterday by that of Robert Lincoln O'Brien, the Republican chairman of the Tariff Commission. The impressive arrangement of witnesses illustrates the importance which its sponsors attach to this far-reaching measure.

Of the testimony given so far, that offered by Mr. O'Brien is the most impressive, partly because his office makes him highly competent to say whether present tariff-making procedure is satisfactory for an expansion of our international trade, partly because he can not be accused of favoring, in principle, an extension of the present Administration's powers. So it is noteworthy that the chairman of the Tariff Commission regards the measure as so moderate "that it should pass both the Senate and House without a dissenting vote."

To this rather sweeping assertion legitimate exception may be taken, not because of any disagreement with the purposes of the measure, but from doubt as to whether it is not being over-advertised as a practical agency for the restoration of international trade. Secretary Wallace, for instance, implied in his testimony that reciprocal tariff agreements resulting from the authority given by this bill would enable the Government to curtail its agricultural subsidy program. Such a result would be all to the good, but it is doubtful whether overseas markets on the scale visualized by Mr. Wallace can ever be opened up again, reciprocal tariffs or none.

The chief benefit to be expected from the proposed alteration in tariff policy is a gradual lowering of the present excessive barriers to trade maintained by almost every important commercial nation. Undoubtedly a lead by the United States in this direction would have general effect in thawing the ice in which international commerce is now frozen. Undoubtedly this would result in some net gain in employment for this country, to say nothing of a general ameliorative effect in world relations.

But the assurances that the increase in executive power will be handled cautiously, plus the long distance to which the world has traveled in building nationalistic economies, alike sound a warning against overestimating the immediately beneficial effects of legislation which constitutes an important change in heretofore accepted practice. It is not because it is likely to bring an overnight change for the better; but because it seeks to embody the sound philosophy of "live and let live," that this revision of an outworn tariff policy is arousing such widespread support.

Disgraceful.

It would be easy enough to point out that many Government pensioners, whose service records are none too distinguished, are receiving far more from the Government than are the widows of those men who went down with the dirigible Akron nearly a year ago. It would be easy but, one hopes, unnecessary.

For the Government of the United States to be paying these women, many of them with families to support, such small amounts that several are forced to scrub floors for a bare living is disgraceful. It is only a matter of simple justice to demand that the Government of the United States pay decent homage to the memory of the officers and men who died in the Akron tragedy, leaving behind women and children who certainly deserve a better fate than cleaning Washington office buildings.

Tax Exempt Securities.

Secretary Morgenthau's indorsement of the much-discussed proposal to tax income from hitherto tax-exempt securities is duly qualified. He recognizes the necessity of securing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States specifically authorizing Federal taxation of State and local issues, and vice versa. He suggests that elimination of tax exemptions should be applied to issues of local as well as National governments, since otherwise the Federal authorities would be handicapped in competition with borrowers offering wholly tax-exempt securities. Most important of all, Mr. Morgenthau has no thought of making the recommended legislation retroactive in order to include obligations now tax exempt.

Estimates of revenue obtainable from removal of tax-exemption privileges are often based upon the assumption that the great volume of outstanding tax-exempt issues, approximately $40,000,000,000, would become a source of income to the Government. Such procedure would be a gross violation of the terms of the contract existing between the Government and holders of its obligations. But in view of the abrogation of the gold clause it is reassuring to have the Secretary of the Treasury state his views in this particular instance.

Obviously, Mr. Morgenthau's current financing program will not be affected by his advocacy of the proposed Constitutional amendment. And the chief arguments in favor of the change are not concerned with revenue considerations, as the income from taxation of future public issues would be offset to an unknown extent by the higher cost of borrowing. The benefits would come through withdrawal of the special advantages enjoyed by Governmental borrowers in competition with private investment demands, and a wider distribution of Government issues now concentrated in the hands of wealthy individuals and corporations. The temptation to extravagance in Governmental spending would also be curbed to some extent by elimination of the present discrimination in taxation of securities.

Reaping The Whirlwind.

Hilarious clamor marked the revolt against the economy act in Thursday night's caucus of Democratic Representatives. A few weeks ago the House submissively accepted the Administration's bill, continuing in effect reduced pensions and salaries, but the trend of the times has brought to many Congressmen a change of heart. Why should they take responsibility for denying the veterans and Federal employes a share in the largesse of the New Deal when the Government is spending money at an unprecedented rate to lift other groups out of the depression?

Some members of the House feel double-crossed. They accepted the economy program—which, after all, touches only one phase of the Government's spending policy—with the understanding that it would be passed by the Senate and signed by the President. But the Senate almost wiped out the economy provisions. The Administration is now reported willing to compromise. Hence, a large number of Congressmen feel constrained to demonstrate their interest in the veterans' vote without regard for the budget or party loyalty.

Of course, this attitude is carrying the Administration back to the discarded evils of a haphazard pensions policy. But it can not be said that the revolting Congressmen should carry the entire blame for this. The Administration has sanctioned a great outpouring of funds for the farmer, the unemployed, for homeowners, bank depositors and various other groups. Since the effects of these enormous outlays upon the budget and the National credit seem to be ignored, the President's arguments for economy in salary and pension allowances have lost some of their punch.

While House Democrats were protesting against the economy measure, Postmaster General Farley was making a significant speech in New York. Admitting that the recovery program is costly, he poopooed any alarm over our Federal debt (estimated at $29,000,000,000 at the end of the current fiscal year) because it is not yet equal to Great Britain's national indebtedness. In the face of this attitude it is the more difficult for the Administration to hold members of Congress in line on an economy bill affecting a politically powerful group a few months before election day. When a hole is knocked in a dyke a torrent is the usual result.

To Encourage Sane Driving.

Congress may well consider enactment of the automobile liability insurance bills for the District an essential task of its present session. Although these measures have appeared on the legislative program rather suddenly, they have been under scrutiny for a long time. Unanimous indorsement by various trade and civic groups should hasten their passage.

The desirability of making common carriers responsible for damages or injuries they may cause in the conduct of their business is universally recognized. Yet taxicabs are allowed to operate on the streets of Washington with no guaranty whatever as to their financial responsibility. Many cab operators carry no insurance and are without property to satisfy possible judgments against them. Pedestrians struck down by these drivers or passengers injured while in their care have no chance whatsoever of receiving compensation. It is almost incredible that Congress permits such a condition to exist in the National Capital.

Equally important is the bill aimed at irresponsible and reckless drivers of private automobiles. This measure would not compel all motorists to take out insurance. It would apply only to motorists convicted of driving while drunk, of running away from the scene of an accident involving personal injuries and of reckless driving, and to those who fail to satisfy judgments involving personal injuries or property damage of more than $100. Drivers in any of these categories would have to establish financial responsibility for future accidents or lose the right to operate a motor vehicle on the public streets and highways.

The obvious defect in this measure is that it allows every irresponsible driver one serious accident before the law catches up with him. On the other hand, Massachusetts has found that compulsory insurance for all drivers encourages reckless driving, increases the accident rate and gives rise to numerous abuses in the collection of insurance benefits. No other State has experimented with compulsory insurance, but 21 States have adopted the principle of the liability measure sponsored by the American Automobile Association. A more satisfactory means of controlling reckless drivers may be evolved, but in the meantime the citizens of Washington are entitled to the protection afforded by this conservative bill.

TWENTY YEARS AGO TODAY.

JUSTICE OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES' "intention to retire from the United States Supreme Court was learned from an authoritative source." From the same source came the information that William Howard Taft, of New Haven, Conn., formerly President of the United States, would be appointed by President Wilson to fill the vacancy.

A RECOMMENDATION to reduce the Japanese naval estimates by $20,000,000 was carried by the upper house of Parliament. This was in addition to the $11,000,000 curtailment of naval estimates by the lower house.

SENATOR ALBERT B. FALL, of New Mexico, urged armed intervention for the protection of Americans and other foreigners in the "stricken Republic of Mexico."

TEN YEARS AGO TODAY.

DUBLIN WAS the center of great excitement as mutiny broke out in the ranks of the national army. There were shouts of "Up, De Valera" in a crowd that was collecting funds for the republicans.

EDWIN DENBY retired as Secretary of the Navy and Theodore Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, became the acting head of the Navy Department.

Letters to the Editor

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters over 250 words are subject to condensation.

Satisfactory and Conclusive.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In regard to the article recently appearing in The Post making what seemed to be a scurrilous attack upon the domestic life, habits and civilization of the Irish people, the committee created by the protesting societies and organizations to deal with the matter finds that your explanation and disclaimer of intent made when the committee called upon you satisfactory and conclusive. The article was of a nature that no self-respecting people could be expected to suffer it in silence and was the more intolerable in that it seemed to culminate an habitual dispargement of our ancestors and of our race that has stretched over generations and has no basis or origin but a purpose to justify an historic oppression and huge national wrong.

We are satisfied, after our pleasant conference with you, that the publication in The Post which has aroused so much indignation among citizens of Irish descent, was accidental and not intentional; and we are further satisfied that The Post under your management having no purpose but to deal fairly and justly with all peoples will remember the dignity, history and just claims to a maintained respect of the Irish people and will not again allow the publication of matter that so grossly misrepresents them.

We desire to thank you for your courtesy and sympathetic interest.

ANDREW I. HICKEY, Chairman.
Washington, March 8.

[The Post would not wittingly make any statement or take any stand injurious to the kindly and lovable Irish race. While the original misunderstanding of the intent of an article in The Post is to be regretted, nevertheless it has given pleasant occasion for this newspaper to become more closely acquainted with the leaders of the Irish societies in Washington, and to make clear that it has no bias against any people or any worthy cause.]

A Four-Point Plan.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: This is an appeal to all Americans regardless of party affiliations or creeds. The time has arrived when we must end experiments and pull together. One and all, rich and poor alike, must put our shoulders to the wheels and get our country back to normalcy. To establish prosperity we must enable every family or person, whether male or female, to earn money enough to spend for necessities other than just a place to sleep and eat. I herewith submit the following points that will enable our Government to accomplish what I am proposing:

1. First of all, establish in every city of 1,000, or over, a Federal Employment Agency and Draft Board to force or appeal to every man or woman to register, whether employed or unemployed, to ascertain the age of each, occupation, profession, and to classify each case. "A" represents the ones whose financial condition need no help, but can help others by employing them as needed from the Government agency; "B" those at present employed; and "C" those unemployed and in distress. This "C" class must be divided into "C-1," those who are compelled to work and support families or themselves, and "C-2," those whose relatives are financially able and willing to see them through this period.

2. Each Federal Draft Employment Agency would have the right to put those in class "C-1" on the Government pay roll at $15 a week, thus putting money into circulation and starting industrial demands for help. The Federal Draft Employment Branch would furnish industry with its needed help. This, in turn, would cut off from the Government's pay roll those employed by industry.

3. We have but to put a sales tax, for a two-year period, on everything except foodstuffs to bring in the millions daily to accomplish the task. I have asked every patriotic American citizen to do his part in this critical period by advocating the sales tax, which takes only a few added pennies except on luxuries. THE COMMONER.

D. C. Liquor Regulations.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In drawing up the rules under which liquor is served in the District, presumably an effort was made to regulate what was felt to be a dangerous traffic.

The fathers have forbidden vertical drinking and have "banished the horrors of the saloon." In its place they have set up liquor in the restaurants. If the saloon was bad, at least its corruption tainted only those who went in to seek it. It embraced only men. Liquor in restaurants is available to men and women alike. Drinking has been forced into the open—where it flourishes as a temptation to all, an invitation to young girls and children who, under the saloon, would never have been exposed to its charms. There is no place where a man can go and, in the company of men, enjoy a drink.

The fathers have forbidden the drawing of high test beer in the sight of a customer. Three point two can be drawn openly, but not high test beer. Who knows why? Under this rule it is possible for the bar tender to draw beer into unwashed glasses and to carry on no one knows what other iniquitous business behind the screen.

What good have these men done us, who pretend to regulate our drinking.

Ancestry.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There appeared in your paper recently news that the widow of the son of Alexander Dumas died in Paris.

Few Americans are aware that Alexander Dumas, writer of "The Count of Monte Christo," "The Three Musketeers" and countless other long-lived books of fiction, was part Negro. The story is told that at a social gathering the elder Dumas was approached by a bibulous young Frenchman with: "M. Dumas, I understand your grandmother was a Negress." To which Dumas replied, "Yes," "Then your ancestors must have been monkeys," added the inebriate. "Possibly," retorted Dumas, "my ancestry began where yours left off."

Advice From a Farmer.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Price fixing, or any scheme tending to stifle trade is monstrous. It can only bring disaster and shows ignorance of fundamental economic law. Let us have competition. It is the life blood of business.

Doubling the price of the poor man's sack of flour is heinous. It will help no one, and will prove a boomerang, even to the farmer whom it is supposed to aid. However, the law of supply and demand still operates.

I am a farmer and have been hard hit, but am not howling. All the farmer, or anyone else, needs to do is retrench, cut out self pity and get back to the simple life. The NRA must go, and the sooner it is scrapped the better.

Falsifying History.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with interest your editorial on the liberties that Hollywood is taking with historical facts. You speak of Queen Christina as a Scandinavian Cleopatra who never had an Anthony. Let us for our own self-respect have the truth when these quasi-historical plays come to the city.

Both Mr. Bell and Mr. Melchers have said in their reviews that Christina was homely. The Columbian Encyclopedia says, "Distinguished equally by beauty and possession of a lively imagination, a good memory, uncommon intelligence, she received the education of a man rather than a woman." After abdicating the throne in favor of her cousin Charles, whom her people wished her to marry, she went over to Brussels and adopted the Catholic religion, the inference being that she sacrificed her crown rather than enter into a marriage for state reasons, and that she found consolation in religion, and the arts and sciences. Therefore, an erotic escapade seems wholly out of keeping with Christina's character, however much it may appear to please the critics. I think the producers are slow in learning that there is a large class of people who would go often to the movies, but for the salacious element.

A General Coastal Plan.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The President has appointed a planning board, with Secretary Roper as a member. It is hoped that the "Forgotten States" will now be favored with a regional plan.

The Southern coastal region, from Norfolk to Miami, has special characteristics, such as the inland waterway and sounds; capacity for quick production of timber, notably the long-leaf pine, and ability to support several times the present population through "sustenance fisheries," plus a garden.

Federal authority already exists over the inland waterway, the navigable rivers and streams and the coastal highway. Federal areas are available through National forests. Here, then, is the basis for a Tennessee Valley plan without an act of Congress. Under a nonpolitical commission, this region can be rapidly developed without much money. It affords an opportunity to provide for a multitude of tenant farmers and laborers who will be thrust upon charity by the curtailment of cotton and tobacco acreage.

A general coastal plan will help rather than hinder all meritorious local projects.

Broaden Its Scope.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few days ago there was an article in your paper saying Representative Jenckes had introduced a bill in Congress to compel people to clear away snow and ice on pavements.

Thanks to Representative Jenckes for the fine bill, but I would suggest she go a little further and also compel the District officials to clean gutters and keep manholes open or slap the same fine on them for each day the snow remains. Let the law be for all. Down my way it was utterly impossible to cross a street without going ankle deep in water, because every available truck, wagon, horse, man and shovel was sent in the northwest section. If the northwest section is the only one to have service, then let the other three sections be exempt from paying taxes, water rent, &c. It is like taking bread, butter and jam away from three and giving it all to the fourth. If all laws were made without loopholes for the higher-ups and the rich, poor people would be better off. C. Lady Next Door.

Postoffice Saturday.

The handsome, mysterious woman in the hotel room next to ours was telephoning, late last night. We couldn't help hearing, quite distinctly, her excited contralto . . . .

Seriously, we have hesitated about telling this story. After all, it was, in a very special sense, a private matter. But we shan't reveal so much as to hurt the people concerned; if harm follows to the deal they were debating, the fault is theirs for being mixed up in such an affair. Our point is that you can't be too careful what you say to a friend when there are strangers within earshot.

• • • •

Sometimes the results of such conversational carelessness are more amusing than harmful:

There was a matron in our town-of-origin who strove long toward marrying her young daughter to a railroad's elderly vice president, and finally succeeded. We may add, parenthetically, that the match turned out happily. But a week after the wedding, the bride's mother, taking well-earned vacation, rode in a Pullman a thousand miles distant from her home and heard fellow passengers, utterly unknown to her, discussing every move she had made in that matrimonial campaign.

At other times, however, these indiscretions may have more unpleasant consequences.

• • • •

Anyhow, that lady next door, who was unmistakably a lady, talked over her telephone. And we listened.

• • • •

Why is it, we asked ourselves, that a perfect stranger's business is always so fascinating? Particularly when you are not supposed to listen?

If your best friend asks you to comment on the chronicle of his difficulties, you may remain politely interested for the first 15 minutes, but soon you find it tiresome to give advice. Even should your dearest foe confide his troubles to you, you would, after the first moments of unworthy gloating had passed, discover that it is boring to say "I told you so."

Yet, just let a pair of unknowns begin to talk about anything in the smoking car's seat ahead of you——

It is like the food order of the man at the nearest table. Like your fellow strap-hanger's newspaper. Always more attractive than your own.

We knew a Cabinet member who, because he came from a Jeffersonian constituency—and because, unlike modern Cabinet members, he had abundant leisure—patronized Washington street cars. Aboard one, he was reading a secret memorandum revealing unexpected graft in his department. As the car paused at a corner, he heard a couple of men across the aisle whispering. Their subject was the probable winner of a coming Havre de Grace horse race. The C. M. didn't care a 59-ct. dollar about races—had never seen one and never would—but for the reason that those men clearly didn't want to be overheard, he lost all sense of his ministerial dignity when the car, resuming its journey, noisily prevented his learning why 7 to 5 were bad odds on Starlight. He was so angry that he jumped off the conveyance—and left his secret memorandum behind him.

• • • •

So, when we found that we could hear what Lady Next Door was saying, we listened.

• • • •

Besides, we had been wondering about her. She had come to the hotel three days before, and we got our first sight of her while two porters and a bellboy helped her into her apartment. She had a French poodle, which looked thoroughbred, a large wardrobe trunk, a small wardrobe trunk, a suitcase, a Gladstone bag and a hat box, all this baggage, except the poodle, flaunting baggage-labels from earth's strangest quarters, badly pasted and therefore authentically come by. And she had a face and figure we felt justified in describing as arresting.

Telegrams arrived for her at odd hours. Queer parcels were delivered to her. She had peculiar visitors. Women having husky voices and too husky clothes were closeted with her in her room for hours on end. We detected her in an obscure corner of the lobby talking now to polished personages suggestive of diplomacy, talking again to persons in sweaters, who wore knobby shoes and carried caps. We saw her give the personages smiles, the persons money. The first evening after her arrival we heard her say to a cap carrier:

"No-no-no! Five now for your expenses; 50 if you carry out our plan. You will have not any trouble if the light isn't too brilliant. Remember his eyes, mon ami!"

Then, last night, came that ringing of her room-telephone—when we couldn't sleep—and her excited voice talking into the receiver.

• • • •

We do not consider it eavesdropping. We couldn't help but hear.

And it was not like opening a letter addressed to somebody else.

• • • •

She said. "Air you alone? 'E can not 'ear?" . . .

She said: "You left the dog vis 'im? No danger if it should . . . You must know? But why must you know? 'E is myopic, zis man. Get hees money, an'——"

We sat up. We got up. A near-sighted old diplomat, lured Heaven knew where! Guarded by a ferocious dog! To be robbed of his money—and of something else! Who wouldn't listen? In the interests of humanity? . . .

• • • •

"Zut," she was saying, "if you won't do it unless I tell, what can I but tell? You speak French, hein? I think this funny man in next room to me can 'ear, so I tell in French."

And French is one of our many other languages! We glued our ear to the wall.

She said, in French, very clearly: "The poodle's pedigree is perfect, but he is not worth the price I ask—he is not worth anything, because he is going blind!"

BARGERON.

I, for one, would have been perfectly willing to forget about the matter of the politico-lawyers after the first splurge about them. It all struck me as being unfair. The Republicans have always had their politico-lawyers and will have them again as soon as they get back in office, if ever.

Under these circumstances to force the Democrats to deprive themselves of the gravy after they had been out of office for so long didn't square with my sense of justice. It doesn't seem right to tell the men who went out and worked for Mr. Roosevelt, and some of those involved had a lot to do with his being elected, that they should abandon the time-honored practice of lobbying, or as the practical boys put it, of "cashing in." Particularly is this true when they had been promised a redistribution of wealth.

I do think some of the gentlemen should have shown more finesse in their operations. They should have been more gentlemanly, like the Republicans, but the Republicans were used to the business. It was the Democrats' first opportunity at the trough in a long time.

But, inasmuch as the matter is kept before us as an example of how pure the Democrats are, it strikes me as strange that the whole purifying process involves only making the various National committeemen who have opened offices here give up their National committeeships. At no time has there been a demand or suggestion that they cease their practice. The complaint has never been against these people being National committeemen or committeewomen. It has been against their using their political influence in their practice before the departments. Now, divorcing them from the committee does not impair their political influence in the slightest. They have established their contacts, and at least one has quite a few appointments in the Administration to his credit.

The mere removal of these people from the committee as a flourish of reform is a challenge to one's credulity. An ironic touch to it is that, as part of the show, Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross was required to resign as a committeewoman from Wyoming and as one of the vice chairmen, because she is holding the position of Director of the Mint. And they are trying to get W. A. Julian to resign as committeeman from Ohio because he is the Treasurer.

I am moved to further comment by the touching exchange of letters between Mr. Roosevelt and Arthur Mullen. There was a hard nut to crack. Mullen simply refused, at first, to respond to the outcry by resigning as the Nebraska committeeman. And the Administration just could not hurt him. He was Mr. Roosevelt's Western leader. His early support had much to do with Mr. Roosevelt's nomination and that was the real difficulty. After the nomination Mr. Roosevelt's path was clear. I suppose Arthur has been responsible for as many appointments in the Administration as any other one man. He had largely to do, if he was not directly responsible for Mr. Ickes' selection. I notice, too, that Mr. Ickes has said it was all right for Arthur to practice before his department, but not for some others.

• • • •

Anyway, the Administration simply could not turn Arthur down. And no one but the most incorrigible idealist would want them to. But it was a problem. They had announced to the country that lobbying committeemen must resign, that their activities did not comport with the New Deal.

"How about Arthur?" everybody, particularly the cynics, asked.

The exchange of letters proved to be the solution. They disclose that Arthur is to continue to work with Mr. Roosevelt in carrying out of old-fashioned Jeffersonian ideals and Mr. Roosevelt in turn, is to continue to depend on Arthur for assistance and advice. That set-up, of course, will not hurt Arthur's business in the slightest.

But the reformers will be satisfied. They think they have won a point.

Kansas City, March 9 (AP).

William Winstead, of the Bureau of Missing Persons for the Kansas City police, has it figured that love affairs are the principal reasons for persons leaving home and being reported missing.

Hired by a coal company, he got a $500 bonus, put it with $400 savings and $100 borrowed from a sister, investing the $1,000 in Henry Ford's horseless carriage. Sold this and some more stock to Ford in 1919 for $30,000,000. As general manager of Ford plants he installed the $5 a day wage. Detroit's police commissioner, then mayor from 1919 to 1922, when he was given Truman Newberry's Senate seat. Battled Mr. Mellon, probed the Internal Revenue Bureau, demanded high taxes on the rich—investing his own fortune in tax exempts. Sued for $11,000,000 by the Treasury for Ford stock profit taxes, he not only won but got a refund of $1,000,000 he had previously paid. Gave the refund to charity, and $10,000,000 more to Michigan's children fund. Letter From Bald-Headed Dad to Daughter

By Robert Quillen

My Dear Louise:

Mrs. K—— and her two daughters are charming, and your enthusiasm is not at all surprising. But I think you should know something of their character before you become too intimate with them. Charm is poor salve for a hurt pocketbook.

These ladies employ a poor widow to make most of their clothes. So far as I know, they never have defrauded her of a cent; but they make her wait six months at a time for her pitiful wage, and often she is without money to buy food and fuel while they enjoy life at her expense.

The rich sometimes forget to pay the small sums they owe the poor, but few forget small sums the poor owe to them.

The truth is that money, being the thing most sought after and most valued, has become the test and measure of honor; and people who can not be trusted in money matters can not be trusted in any matter at all.

Since this is true, I would have you lean backward in scrupulous honesty where another's money is involved.

The chief danger is the tendency to be careless in dealing with small sums; for the sum that seems small to one will seem large to another, and honor is a matter of principle not measured in dollars and cents.

If you are made treasurer of some club and entrusted with a few nickels and dimes, the coins you receive are sacred. You may be tempted to spend one now and then, knowing that you can replace it when necessary, but the practice is dangerous.

Has another treasurer the right to spend $10,000 of his company's money in the stock market, intending to replace it before it is missed?

If you owe some friend a quarter, which you shouldn't have borrowed in the first place, your honor is more involved than it would be if you had borrowed a thousand dollars. For your friend would have required you to return the larger sum, and honor alone will remind you to return the quarter.

There are few "big" tests in life. Their very bigness prevents temptation. The test of honor is in little things where dishonor invites no penalty. Love, DAD.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

The Funniest Story.

Mark Twain, P. G. Wodehouse, Stephen Leacock, have often made me laugh. Stevenson's "Travels With a Donkey" has mirth in abundance. But I do not think I have ever laughed so helplessly and outrageously over any other printed matter as I roared over a little book written by Julian Street, called "The Need of Change." This was read aloud to a little group one evening in the country; and if any one had looked through the window into the room, he would have thought we had "eaten of the insane root that takes the reason prisoner," or that we had taken a poison the effects of which were unusually violent. For we were in convulsions.

An American and his wife, who lived in Canal Dover, Ohio, were enjoying their first European journey. In Switzerland they had met an English curate. He was dressed in rusty black, well worn, untidy his clothes looked as if he had slept in them. He was agreeable in an offhand way; he offered a cigar interrogatively with a word that sounded like SMILK?

And you know, it does sound exactly like that, when spoken with the exaggerated Oxford accent. It may not look like that on the printed page; but just say it aloud, and for once in your life, anyhow, you have spoken phonetic Oxford. Then he told the Americans he and his wife would be glad to have them come and pay them a visit when they reached England.

The two Americans talked it over together, and decided they would accept this invitation. They thought his social and financial status was about that of a rural Methodist preacher in Ohio; and while they did not particularly want to go, they were afraid they might hurt his feelings if they did not visit his humble home.

When they arrived at the vast English estate, his wife asks her husband anxiously, "Have you brought your Tuxedo?" And his struggle wtih the valet baffles all description.

No End of Books

By

Theodore Hall

There was J. D. Marstock, a great and magnificent youth to the Fourth Formers at Wellington, who in later years turned out to be an underwriter at Lloyds and had never married because of the "wimskies."

"The 'wimskies?'" our narrator inquired, thinking it some obscure disease.

"The women, you know—I always call them that," replied Marstock. "They're all so fascinating, I can't make up my mind."

And then there was the French marquis, who had learned English from a cockney nurse, with dubious but remarkable effect. And the dreadful Mrs. Miriam Codd, who insisted upon talking about heredity in the middle of the Syrian desert. And that amazing valet, Arketal, who stole Lord Curzon's trousers.

• • • •

I am probably pretty vague about this, but I want to give you a hint of what you will find in the most engaging book of our time since "South Wind." That is Harold Nicholson's "Some People." Seven years ago it first appeared; the Oxford Press has just issued it in a neat little volume of the world's classics at 80 cents.

Harold Nicholson, before he retired, had a successful career in the British Diplomatic Corps. If you imagine that submerged him in a dull prudence, you are going to be surprised. For this book, an informal running narrative of himself and some people he met at one time or another, is marked by as sly and delicious a humor as you could find this side of Max Beerbohm. No one owns a sharper eye than Mr. Nicholson; very few can put down a tale with such delicate poison and complete urbanity. Some of the characters are real—Curzon, Lloyd George and Clemenceau, for example, at the Peace Conference. The rest, of whom Mr. Nicholson says are "half truths," you will see just as vividly and enjoy rather more.

Take "Some People" along when next you pack your bags for a desert isle.

• • • •

Two other little volumes appear in the World Classics series. There is nothing stuffy about "English Critical Essays: Twentieth Century," edited by Phyllis M. Jones. A. C. Benson might be Harold Nicholson's cousin, so lively and keen is his description of Swinburne and Theodore Watts-Dunton in one of the essays included. You will like it almost as much as Max Beerbohm's famous little piece on the same men, "No. 2, the Pines." But the incomparable Max is represented here only by an essay on "Ouida." Which reminds me of one of the neatest dedications in literature, put by Beerbohm at the beginning of one of his books: "To Louise de la Ramee, with my profound respect; to 'Ouida' with my love." Other essays Miss Jones has gathered come from Virginia Woolf, Saintsbury, Lytton Strachey, George Moore, and T. S. Eliot—all very good reading on a quiet night.

Last of these snug little books from the Oxford Press is Constance Holme's sensitive and poetic tale of one day in the life of an English village, "The Splendid Fairing." In 1920 it won the Femina—Vie Heureuse Prize, and has lost no stature since. Few writers, by the way, compose lovelier titles than Miss Holme. Her other works include "The Trumpet in the Dust," "Crump Folk Going Home," and "The Old Road from Spain."

• • • •

Davy Crockett is back again, in a biography written by the very person in all America who should have done it—Miss Constance Rourke. If you read her brilliant "American Humor" (Harcourt Brace, 1931), you will know Miss Rourke's command of the whole field of folk Americana, from the eighteenth century Yankee trader to the background of Dreiser.

In the book in hand, "Davy Crocket" (Harcourt Brace, $2.50), she has drawn a picture of Crockett far fuller and rounder than anything which has come before. The tall stories and legends of a rough backwoodsman have their place, naturally—no other single American figure has gathered so many. But Miss Rourke finds abundant testimony to prove he was neither uncouth nor illiterate and she gives it here, in some cases for the first time.

Yet it was the legends I liked best, in their fresh and rugged humor which Miss Rourke captures so well. There was the time the earth was frozen stiff and stopped turning. Davy, as the story went, squeezed a bear over the earth's axis until the hot oil loosened it. Then he gave the earth's cog-wheel a kick and whistled "Push Along, Keep Moving."

"In about 15 seconds"—the legend goes on as if Davy were telling it in his own words—"the earth gave a grunt and began to roll around easy, and the sun walked up most beautiful, saluting me with such a wind of gratitude it made me sneeze.

"I lit my pipe by the blaze of his top-knot and walked home, introducing people to the fresh daylight with a piece of sunrise in my pocket."

And some people still say America has no folk poetry.

BAKER.

The A. F. G. E. chief appealed to all Democrats in the House to keep the pay issue out of politics just before the Democratic House caucus yesterday afternoon.

The A. F. G. E., Mr. Babcock stressed, is neither Democratic nor Republican, and will continue to make every effort to have every question affecting Government personnel decided on its merits and not on a political basis.

"The present Congress," he continued, "has created hundreds of thousands of jobs. Not a single one of them has been placed by Congress under the merit system of appointment. The committees of both Houses, which are supposed to consider civil service matters, are not holding meetings to consider the facts and reasons with respect to questions on the public personnel management. The nonpolitical branches of the Federal service have been decimated, without Civil Service Committee study. The nonmerit branches of the Government have been tremendously augmented."

In the Division of Investigation, Justice, 326 of the 373 special agents have qualified as "marksmen," "sharpshooters" or "expert" in the use of the pistol. This number includes the present training class.

March Winds.

Playful was the wind today,
It caught me unaware—
And hurled a snowflake in my eye,
And tangled up my hair.

Furious was the wind today,
Loud and wild and crazy;
I cared not, for beneath my roof
I was quite warm and lazy.

Good night, good night, my changeful one,
I bid you stop your screaming
And rest upon my window ledge
Till I am done with dreaming.

All that was mortal of A. Round
Now lies beneath this mossy mound;
He kept late hours, a grevious sin
When one can't dodge a rolling pin!

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

The Man Who Killed Rasputin, the Mad Monk.

(After reading the testimony of Prince Felix Youssoupoff in a London court.)

"I killed Rasputin," declared Elmer Twitchell today in a remarkable interview with anybody who would listen. "That fellow Youssoupoff is an impostor."

• • • •

"How did you kill the Mad Monk?" an inquirer demanded.

"It took a little of everything," confessed Mr. Twitchell, a little boastfully. "I started with rough on rats, ground glass and razor blades concealed in nut cake. Before I had finished the job I was using machine guns, army sabers, depth bombs and poison gas."

"Rasputin must have been a tough proposition," it was suggested.

"Before I had been working on him six months I was sorry I had accepted the contract," said Mr. Twitchell.

"Did you have a definite plan of extermination?"

"Yes, I drew up blueprints and a prospectus at first but I left them home in my other suit."

"So what?"

"So I had to kill him extemporaneously!"

• • • •

"Go on, Mr. Twitchell. What did you do first?"

"I had been sending him cyanide of potassium for a week in rock candy, but he liked it and asked for more. Then I tried poisoning his vodka by putting in a 20 per cent mixture of American repeal whisky. He seemed to grow stronger and stronger, so one night I put carbolic acid in his borsch and beat him over the head with a picket from an iron fence.

"Did this kill him?"

"No. The old boy liked it and asked for more. He thought it was a game. It was getting pretty discouraging."

• • • •

"What did you try next?"

"The bow and arrow. For two weeks I hid in a tree and fired poisoned arrows at the Mad Monk. I really riddled his body, but he tore them out with a weird roar, and didn't even call a doctor."

"Did you lose confidence?"

"I remembered the old motto, 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try again.' With an army officer, I broke into his bedroom and played the guitar while the army officer attacked him with machine guns on all fronts. Nothing seemed to hurt him except my guitar-playing. Then we used chloroform, and when the Mad Monk became unconscious we rushed him to the zoo and had the elephant walk up and down his body."

"Did this kill the Mad Monk?"

"Naw. He thought it a body massage and applauded."

"By this time wasn't it getting a bit discouraging?"

"I'll tell the world!" said Elmer.

"What did you do next?"

"I sublet the contract."

"To whom?"

"To Youssoupoff," concluded Mr. Twitchell, proudly.

"Then Prince Youssoupoff killed Rasputin, as he claims?"

"Maybe, but I did all the preliminary work!" snapped Mr. Twitchell.

Not Even Minor League Material Now.

Greece has given Sam Insull his unconditional release, but even the Bridgeport Club won't take him.

Well, anyhow, Mr. Insull has no kick. He's had a nice long stay in Greece and been abroad long enough to get rested up from the terrible strain of success and riches in the United States.

President Roosevelt has been in office more than a year. Looking at the country today, he can probably say in all candor, "I don't recall the face, but the name is familiar."

Crown Point Aftermath.

Judge (to desperado)—I sentence you to 80 years in the penitentiary.

Desperado (gratefully)—Thanks, awfully, your honor, for this opportunity to go free. I was afraid I might be punished.

Milk Decision Gives New Deal Penalty 'Teeth'

NRA and AAA Provisions to Give Government Absolutism.

Editor's note: By two recent decisions, the Supreme Court appears to have embarked on a new and vital legal philosophy of utmost importance to recovery legislation. Herewith is presented one of a series of dispatches by the United Press analyzing this development.

A more decisive and bolder policy in enforcement of New Deal recovery policies is expected to result from the Supreme Court's action in upholding the validity of the New York State milk control law.

Coming when the National Recovery Administration was faced with one of its recurring crises, the court's decision that it could not interfere with the enforcement of an economic policy, except in extreme cases, offered a source of new courage to those seeking to vanquish the depression by economic control.

In substance the court said: The Legislature may decide on any economic policy it chooses. The court may not intervene unless legislation is patently not in pursuit of this policy or where it is arbitrary and capricious as judged in the light of what is being sought to attain.

Minority Interpretation.

In the words of the dissenting opinion of Justice James C. McReynolds, who thought the courts should give consideration to the wisdom of a law, and whether the end is legislative and the means appropriate:

"If a statute to prevent conflagrations should require householders to pour oil on their roofs as a means of curbing the spread of fire when discovered in the neighborhood, we would hardly uphold it."

The dissent held that the New York legislation was something of this nature.

The effect on the New Dealers is expected to prove one of encouragement. There have been several phases of the authority granted in both the National recovery and the agriculture adjustment laws that have been almost unused.

One of these is the licensing provision by which all members of an industry may be placed under a license to do business if the President finds that recalcitrant groups are undoing the good being sought for the industry as a whole.

Laws Given "Teeth."

This provision was written into the acts to give them "teeth," and was insisted on by the Administration. So far, almost no recourse has been made to this provision.

In substance the provision would require all those engaged in an industry to take out licenses. These could be refused those organizations which refused to abide by code provisions. Persons continuing in business without a license would be subject to criminal penalties.

If, under the Fourteenth amendment, the States can regulate prices, hitherto considered one of the actions the court would be unlikely to approve, and can impose restrictions on any important business needed to protect the public good, then, New Deal lawyers believe, the Federal Government may do the same under the Fifth amendment.

He served as captain with the 310th Army Engineers in France, and later as a major in the Army of Occupation. At his death he was a member of the Officers' Reserve Corps.

He was a thirty-second degree Mason and a member of Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

Mdivanis Deny 22 Old and New Charges

Los Angeles, March 9 (AP).—A plea of not guilty to eight counts of falsifying corporation records and fourteen counts of grand theft was entered today in Superior Court by David and Serge Mdivani.

The charges included counts of a new indictment returned by the grand jury yesterday, in addition to former charges involving $10,000 at a trial in which the jury disagreed.

Boy Shoots Brother, Then Gives Him Blood

Memphis, March 9 (AP).—Theo Collums, 16, accidentally shot his brother, Aaron, 14, inflicting a wound so serious death was expected. Then Theo came to Aaron's aid with blood for a transfusion, which, doctors say, may save the youth's life.

The brothers were playing with a pistol which had not been fired in two years when it was discharged, striking Aaron.

Kitchens and Greatness

Biographers, probing into the whereof of many a man's greatness, have failed to look in the kitchen. Windsor Booth has another "favorite foods of the New Deal leaders" article—this time, Henry T. Rainey—in the Magazine of this week's

Article Tells Day in Life Of President

Mrs. Curtis Dall Writes Biographical Sketch for Magazine.

Robust Humor Pervades Word Picture by Daughter.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

Mrs. Curtis B. Dall, daughter of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, who with her two small children, Eleanor and Curtis, jr., has been spending most of the winter in the White ouse with her parents, has found time in her busy life to write articles for numerous magazines and papers and to broadcast weekly on various subjects.

Mrs. Dall has made many friends since her arrival in Washington last spring. She is the reason why, for the first time in many years, White House parties have an attraction for young people.

In the midst of all these occupations, Mrs. Dall has found time to write a brief and interesting little "piece" in a current magazine, issued yesterday.

President's Crowded Day.

The article, "The President's Day After One Year in the Biggest Job in the World," though brief and informal, gives a splendid idea of the crowded life of the Chief Executive.

The tenor of the opening of the article, "Save my coffee!" exclaims the President as his day opens with the exuberant greetings of his grandchildren—persists to the end when Mrs. Dall, having filled her distinguished father's day to the nth minute, drops in a paragraph concerning what the President does in his odd moments.

She speaks of the extensive personal correspondence kept up by the President in spite of his many duties, and of his famous stamp collection, one of his favorite hobbies.

A Pat for Winks.

Winks, the 5-month-old English setter, who spends much of each day in the President's office, comes in for his share of his master's attention.

Mrs. Dall says it is not unusual to see the President engrossed in talking to somebody without moving his eyes from the speaker's face, reach down and pat the exuberant puppy.

The article is illustrated with informal drawings by Howard Chandler Christy, sketched during one of Mr. Christy's visits at the White House. Several of them show an almost portrait-perfect likeness of the President. A particularly good one is of the White House family, consisting of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, with Mrs. Dall and her children, gathered for afternoon tea in the cosy upstairs sitting room of the Executive Mansion.

It is expected the White House box will be occupied by young friends.

Congress Shuns Tightwad Label, Tips Generously.

By Mildred Reed Bundy.

These are good days for girls in the dining rooms on the Hill, says a woman who knows, for she has spent more than ten years as waitress there.

"The new Congressmen are wonderful about tipping," testifies the experienced waitress. "They don't want to have a reputation for being stingy when they're new. They'll get over that, though," she sighed. "Always when politics change the girls look for better money. What with the tips added to their $50 a month wages, most dining room girls up here are making more than $100 a month."

JOBS FOR BLONDES.

"Maybe it's because Democrats like blondes, I don't know," conjectured the woman with a decade's experience in food-serving on the Hill. "But I do know that the new manager in one of the dining rooms wants a blonde put in when a brunette girl leaves. I heard him say so."

How easy it is for the dining room girls, especially brunettes, to say, "You old meanie," to the manager. His name is J. Meany.

CIGARS AND SNIGGERS.

When slightly bald, sandy-mustached Henry A. Bellows, vice president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, and chairman of the legislative committee of the National Association of Broadcasters, tossed a fat cigar across the table to Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana, a big laugh went up in the crowded hearing room of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. For Mr. Bellows had stated in the beginning of his remarks against the pending legislation for a new radio commission that he was not paid to use his influence in any undue manner.

Senator Wheeler had restlessly searched his pockets and whispered to his neighboring solons at the committee table. Mr. Bellows quickly discerned the need of the cigar.

"I meant to get it from this millionaire here," Senator Wheeler said, motioning toward Senator Hamilton F. Kean, of New Jersey.

When he was asked what he liked to do in times when he was not busy, a member of the police guard at the U. S. D. A. administrative building had a surprising answer.

"Here's what I do," he said, pulling a newspaper out of his desk drawer.

"I figure out these Culbertson bridge hands. Hardly ever play bridge at home, but I like to play it here on paper."

EMERGENCY AVENUE.

The late Representative Joseph A. Hooper, of Michigan, is said to have objected to the generous use of the word emergency applied to legislation. He said that "emergency" had become a mere slogan and that by next inaugural time Constitution avenue would be changed to Emergency avenue. These words were his last on the floor of the House. In an hour after speaking them he died.

When Mrs. Ross A. Collins went with a friend to the gallery of the House of Representatives she made a discovery about her husband, Representative Collins, of Mississippi.

"No" Says D. C. Bar to Taking Lady Lawyers

Ballot of 415 to 310 Keeps Women Out of Association.

The nays have it.

The result of the secret ballot held by the members of the District Bar Association to determine whether women would be admitted was announced yesterday by F. Regis Noel, association president.

Mr. Noel said that 729 members voted. Of these, 415 said no, and 310, yes.

"The results were a complete surprise to me," Mr. Noel declared. "I didn't think there'd be so many yesses! Not enough, though," he chuckled. "No, sir, not enough!

"I told a group of women lawyers the other evening at a dinner that they weren't ready yet. When the cigars were passed the women turned up their noses at them. Marvelous cigars, too!"

Mr. Noel admitted the woman's movement seemed to be growing.

Campaign Too Weak.

"If they'd campaigned a bit this time," he said, "I wouldn't be surprised if they'd got in. We're weakening. You can tell that by the votes. One good campaign and the jig would have been up!"

A kind of compensation will be offered to the women attorneys, according to Mr. Noel.

"When we have our annual dinner they can come to that," he said. "It will be the first time in 60 years that women have been invited to a District Bar Association annual dinner.

"One woman crashed the gates once, though," he suddenly remembered. "It was Mrs. Mabel Willebrandt. She tried everywhere to get a ticket and couldn't. So the evening of the banquet she came down to the Mayflower, talked to some lawyer she saw just outside the door, then walked inside and talked to somebody there. First thing we knew she was at the head table talking to somebody else. Before long she was seated in a place of honor."

Library Right Offered.

In reference to the splendid library maintained by the District Bar Association, Mr. Noel suddenly became serious.

"I'd like for the women attorneys to know that they have a perfect right to belong to our library," he said. "They give as their chief reason for wanting to become members of our association that they want the use of the library. They can have that by simply paying a fee."

Regarding the finality of the ballot, Mr. Noel said rather sadly that he didn't know just how final it was.

"But," this in more cheerful accents, "it's settled for a while anyway!"

Revised Values Held New Need For Children

Pupils Should Learn All Not Well With World, Say Educators.

Children must develop a social consciousness and an awareness of the social problems of today. It is just as imperative for them to learn these things as to learn to read and write.

Petite, dynamic Ann Shumaker, outstanding leader in the Progressive Education Association, made this declaration yesterday. Miss Shumaker is attending the Progressive Education Conference now being held at the Mayflower.

"Teachers and parents can no longer ignore the social and economic revolution that is now upon us," Miss Shumaker declared. "They must prepare children to face these changing conditions when they go out into the world.

"Even the most progressive teachers have not met the challenge these problems present. They recognize the fact that children learn through their own interests, and they are willing to guide children in learning through actual experience. But because of their own ignorance and timidity they have failed to teach youth the fundamentals back of the present-day economic and social crisis.

Economic Misery Viewed.

"Only recently a first-grade class was taken into the country to see how vegetables are raised and prepared for the market. The pupils were interested. It was an excellent way for them to learn.

"Now, the women who were digging those potatoes and gathering those vegetables were poverty-stricken Polish women. They were working in old worn-out shoes and ragged clothing. Many of them were wet up to their waists from having to wade through water. They were working for long hours in the blazing sun, making barely enough money to exist. Did the teachers call the attention of the children to these conditions? Did they point out that they were unnecessary? They did not!

"When I asked them why, they replied that children are not interested in such things, and if they are, what can they do? The same thing is true in all the things taught our children. They study architecture. They learn principles of building, they learn about Gothic, Roman and Greek architecture. No one points out that millions of our people are living in slums, and badly built farmhouses. No one points out that most of our own houses are architectural atrocities.

"Certainly, a revolution is on in our schools. It is necessary and vital. A National and international revolution is taking place, and the children are a part of it. In the schoolroom alone such a revolution would be merely a tempest in a teapot. Reaching over the world as it does, it is a mighty storm. And our children know that this is happening. They are asking: 'Why has this happened and what can be done about it?' We can not ignore their questioning."

I Have Watched You Come.

By Katherine Smith.

Darkly, through the dusk of living
I have watched you come to me,
Hands outstretched, with ways of giving Selflessly.

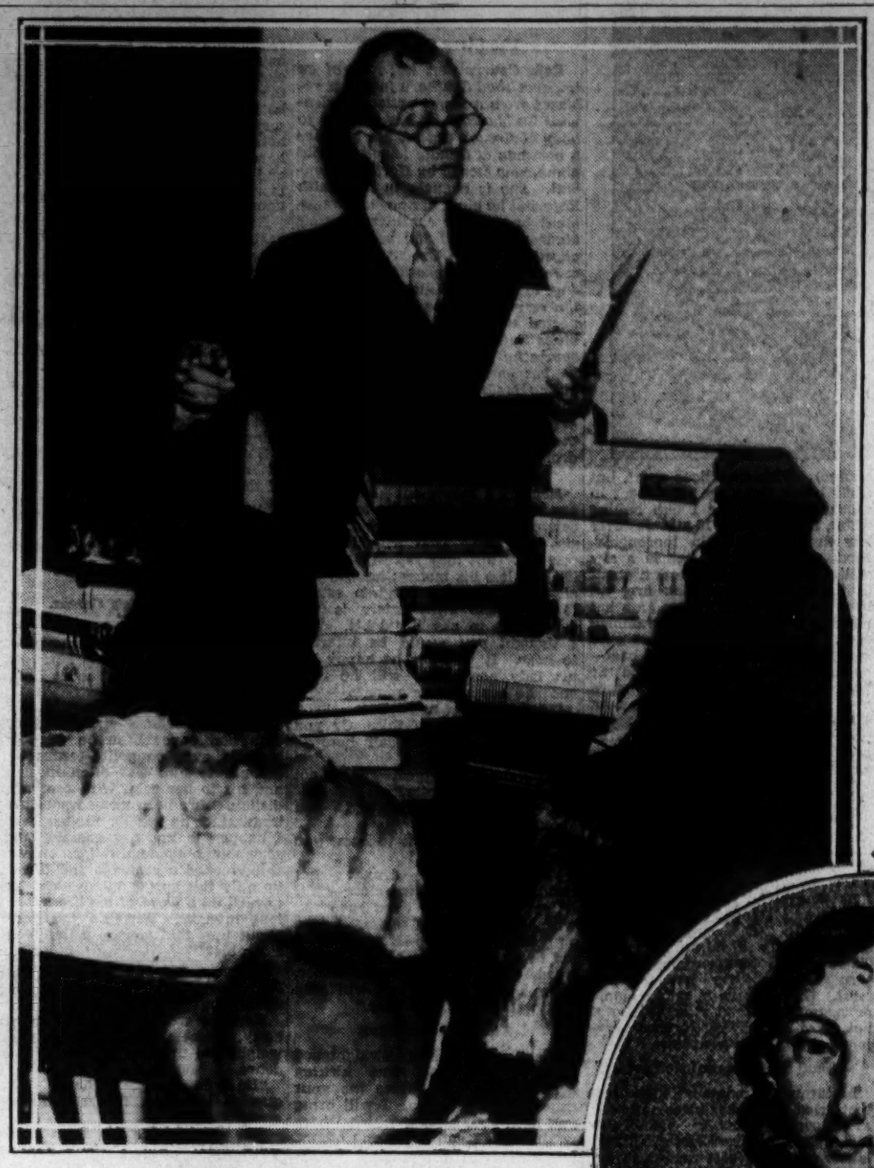
I will watch you go, eyes smarting
With a selfish love; I dare
To place my empty hands, in parting,
On your hair.



Romances Bloom at Tea House That Offers Moon With Meals

Rambling, Attractive Shop in Alexandria Has Been Written Into Popular Fiction by Several Modern Authors—Patrons Ban Too Many Lights.

By Susan Mills.

A young couple step into the hallway of the Little Tea House in Alexandria. They are met by the smiling hostess, who welcomes them with a gracious word.

The young woman's eyes grow round.

"Is our table taken?"

"No, there it is."

The young man smiles.

"You have a moon for us tonight."

They take a little table by the window. Soft light from the newly risen moon streams through the panes. Below them lies the city, faery-like in the evening glow.

Miss Gertrude Crocker smiled as she described the scene.

Moon Only Matters.

"We have many courtships here. There are three tables that are made for lovers. And the moon always does the right thing. It is a special Little Tea House moon. It's really corking.

"In the summer we have tables on deck—up on top of the house and in the garden. I tried to arrange to have some soft lights on deck, but the customers wouldn't stand for it. They won't even have candles. I don't see how they manage to eat—but I guess it doesn't matter much—if there's a moon."

The waitress came in with tea service and put it on the table in front of Miss Crocker. Between, "Sugar?" and "Strong or weak?" she explained the origin of the Tea House.

"Well, I was strapped and needed money. A friend of mine said the only way to make a business was to find a need and fill it. I realized there were few tea houses in Alexandria, so I found a site and got an architect to build a little house. At first, there were only a few rooms, and not more than half a dozen tables. Gradually business grew, and as it grew the house did likewise. The architect balked at the addition of the porches, but we have added them on, one by one, until we have the rambling structure you see now.

Chicken Tendons.

"We began by only serving tea. But one day I was alone in the Tea House and I got a telephone call for a chicken luncheon for two. I had never fried a chicken in my life, and didn't know what to do.

"Fortunately the guests were about three hours coming. I went to a woman down the street and bought two chickens. I asked her to pick and clean them. This she did. Then I went back and read my cook book. It said to draw the tendons out of the legs. So I had to go to another neighbor for help. She laughed at me. 'The chickens are so young that you couldn't find any tendons if you tried!'

"So I worked on my first luncheon all morning. I have prepared luncheons for 20 people in addition to the regular business, but I never worked so hard as I did that day.

"Oh, yes, the Little Tea House has had some literary recognition. Temple Bailey, Mrs. Marguerite Andrews and Nancy Hoyt have put it into novels. Senator Copeland was very nice to us too. He talked over the radio about what he considered a well-balanced meal that we served. He likes tomatoes stuffed with cottage cheese."

Fictional romance has now arrived at the culture club stage and heroines have taken on years and sophistication. Upper left—Instead of poring over the pages of best sellers for their thrills, women now get them second-hand through male book reviewers. Upper right—Ninon de L'Enclos, who at 90 was still a heart-breaker, established a precedent for late romance.

Queen From Business World Ruled Novels of Boom Years

Dish-Washing Wives Now Eclipse Career Women Whose Wholesale Conquests of Misunderstood Husbands Shelved Legal Mates for Soul Mates.

Fictional love, starting on the frontier with the gun-toting sweethearts of desperadoes, now has wound up at the Culture Club. Its recent development is described in the following article, the last of a series on the evolution of best-seller romance.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

Love came to the long-waiting older woman in the late twenties. For 10 years she had watched her younger rivals melt into the embrace of the heroes in the last chapters of the best sellers.

Then came the time for her to take her fictional curtain call.

Furthermore, culture came to her along with love. She joined clubs and began reading book reviews. While secretly she may have dreamed of a Prince Charming who would take her away from dish-washing and fat husbands, she talked openly of Emil Ludwig and Stephan Zweig.

Scatter-brained flappers and defiant beauties had flung their last double-dare at convention by the latter part of the 20s. The jazz school of fiction—great only in quantity—had vanished, leaving behind only a faint whiff of synthetic gin.

Sense After Nonsense.

The fictional heroine who pushed to the foreground at this time was neither flighty nor rebellious. She was intellectual, ambitious, often mature, but nevertheless attractive.

Finally the advent of an 80-year-old heroine in Victoria Sackville West's "All Passion Spent," presaged the coming of a fictional Ninon de L'Enclos, symbol of deathless romance.

Ushered into the spotlight with fanfare and clamor, the new heroine was first and foremost a career woman. Her financial independence created an aura around her and gave her something of an excuse for leading her own life.

When she walked on the stage, the virgin made a hasty exit on the opposite side. For, while the flapper in fiction had either remained chaste or eventually married the man, the career woman lived openly with men whose wives were occasionally so unaccommodating that a divorce was impossible.

The Master Woman Ideal.

In fact, most wives in the fiction of that time were depicted as cold, inhuman creatures who deserved to lose husbands' affections. Feminine readers were sentimental about the mistress rather than the lawful mate, and novels of the type of Fannie Hurst's "Back Street" were popular because they glorified "the other woman."

The housewife who conceived of herself as chained to the cookstove (or to a husband who had long since turned into a great stone face) devoured fiction in which women carved enviable careers for themselves and went in for a liaison—or two—on the side.

The popular heroine was ambitious and entered an occupation that brought her into direct competition and contact with men. Often she became so absorbed in her work that she was afraid to marry, lest it would interfere with her vocation.

Refined Home-Wrecking.

An author unsympathetic to the career woman, however, showed her husband going to the dogs or to another woman and her home collapsing in ruin. But after a series of menages, she usually settled down in her original home, was reunited to her husband, and gave up her career.

Through all this she remained a charming individual whom most women desired to emulate. And many a hitherto home-loving wife craved the independence of her favorite heroine, even though such freedom was often portrayed as entailing the loss of a happy home life.

By the end of the twenties, economic affairs were so depressing that novelists ceased writing of heroines who made good in business. They turned from modern realities as much as possible and began producing "escape fiction," which offered the housewife—and her husband—release from thinking about the current life and death struggle.

Career Woman Fades Out.

By confining itself to problems that could be convincingly solved, this type of fiction proved an effective opiate for all women—and many men. Escape literature in all its forms—the mystery, the Cinderella story, the adventure narrative and the old-fashioned romance—still constitutes the most popular reading fare for the modern woman. Such stories at their worst fill the pages of the pulps; and, at their best, the slick-paper magazines.

As a result, the career woman has no place in up-to-the-minute fiction. The modern fictional heroine works because she needs the money, and not because she considers an occupation glamorous. Even when a vocation is permitted the heroine at the beginning of a novel, she abandons it for housekeeping by the end of the narrative.

Home-Loving Wife Returns.

The heroine of Gladys Hasty Carroll's widely discussed novel, "As the Earth Turns," is a home-loving, hard-working housekeeper whose efficiency is a miracle of perfection.

Never before has the domestic woman been more attractively presented than at the present time. And the modern heroines, who have to work, remain in the business world only long enough to meet the right man.

Since present-day writers are depicting life not as it is, but as the readers of women's magazines would like to have it, reality has been removed from fiction with the precision of a paring knife. But just how long the heroine will stay back at the hearth (with her knitting) is a matter of conjecture.

In the meantime, the modern woman has supplemented her fiction reading with biographies, travel books, and philosophy. Since ability in conversing about best sellers is very much in style, the housewife has her hands full. Short cuts to literary erudition, however, are offered through the book review. By means of this device she can read the novels of her favorite authors—probably Faith Baldwin, Kathleen Norris, Margaret Caulkin Banning, and Alice Duer Miller—and at the same time keep up with Bromfield's "The Farm," Lewis' "Work of Art," Allen's "Anthony Adverse," and Stein's "The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas."

The book reviewer has become the real hero of the hour.

Spinster Breadwinner Hailed As Heroine by Woman Judge

The real, unsung heroine of the Depression is the spinster. So thinks Judge Florence E. Allen of Ohio.

Judge Allen is a forceful protagonist for any opinion she chooses to offer. She was elevated this week to the bench of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Cleveland—the highest judiciary honor ever conferred upon a woman.

In a speech last summer before a convention of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women, Judge Allen said of spinsters:

"During this entire period of financial distress, the unmarried woman earning her own living has stood out like a star.

"I do not know what many a family would have done had it not been for that refuge from their problems—the old maid in the family."

Wisdom of Experience.

Fifty and unmarried, Judge Allen knows all about the spinster's problems. She also knows about making her way in the world. Daughter of an Ohio professor, she received her early education in Ohio schools. But after that she saw to her own education.

From 1904 to 1906 she studied music in Berlin, paying her way by writing, meanwhile, for a New York music journal.

Returning to Cleveland in 1906, she taught Greek, English and history, and served as music critic for the Cleveland News while working for a master's degree in political science and constitutional law. She obtained the degree from Western Reserve University in 1908

Then, because women were barred from the College of Law at Western Reserve, she went to the University of Chicago. And, later, to New York University, where she took her bachelor of laws degree in 1913.

Early Law Career Bleak.

While studying there, she did legal work for the New York League for the Protection of Immigrants and delivered lectures on music for the Board of Education.

Eventually she returned to Ohio to practice. Of her beginning days as a lawyer she has said:

"I had no clients. And I had no money. But I had great hopes; so I spent my time studying until my clients began to come in.

"They did not come in very quickly. And as I wanted cases and the experience they would give me, I went to the Legal Aid Society of Cleveland and offered to work for them for nothing."

Judge Allen is an antagonist of war. Her sentiment was heightened by the death of two brothers in the World War. One was killed at Chauteau Thierry. Another died after his return from the front, a victim of poison gas.

What Today Means

"Pisces."

If March 10 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10 to 11 a. m., from 3 to 4 p. m., and from 8 to 9 p. m. The danger periods are from 9 to 10 a. m., from 1:30 to 2:30 p. m., and from 6 to 7 p. m.

If March 10 is your birthday, Cupid reigns supreme over your life. Love will prove always a mighty influence. It will sway you always in the proper direction. Your love for your parents has made you appreciative of their many sacrifices to further your welfare. Loving thoughts of your mother will always help direct your steps along the right path. The love of a good woman or man will keep your faith in mankind from diminishing. Devine Love will keep lighted the flame of your spiritual light, so no matter how dark your pathway may at times seem, it will suffuse sufficient illumination for you to tread it in safety. True love is unselfish, and it inspires us to think solely of those whose safety and well-being we place paramount to our own. Love, like the phenix of old, rises from the wreckage of human hopes, like "the pillar of fire, by night," to help brighten the way to fresh endeavors. Treasure true love as your most precious possession.

Children born on March 10, as a rule, bring great joy into their parents' lives. They are mentally capable of accomplishing anything they make up their minds to master. They must be made to realize that thoughtlessness causes their parents anxious moments, and sometimes pain. When once they appreciate this fully, they generally try, by ernest endeavor, to correct the cause. Their popularity frequently causes them to unintentionally allow the lure of social affairs distract their minds from their studies. If made to realize how important application to their school books is, this fault is usually corrected.

The woman born on March 10 will be wise to remember that her personal appearance is a valuable asset. Clothes not only help make the man but are even a more important factor in a woman's life.

The man born on March 10 should practice being methodical, if he wishes to succeed. Many people judge a man by his conversation, so it is a mighty good policy to keep it always above the possibility of adverse criticism.

It is not surprising that the Little Tea House in Alexandria is frequented with courting couples, the atmosphere is so cozy and the hostess so gracious. Miss Gertrude Crocker, the manager of the Tea House, pours out a dish of tea and tells amusingly of couples who have their particular moonlit tables. She gives, in addition to a history of the Tea House, a recipe for a cheese souffle that is one of Secretary Wallace's favorite dishes.

Another Serpent Witness Appears

New York, March 9 (U.P.).—The Rev. Joseph Edward Rockliff, stocky little Catholic priest, celebrated his sixty-fifth birthday today and the anniversary found him on land for the first time since 1928 when he started sailing around the world at the rate of 50,000 miles a year to minister to sailors.

He has sailed around the world six times and has been forced to celebrate most holidays on some ocean or other.

"Have you ever seen a sea serpent?" he was asked.

"Well—yes," he replied hesitantly. "But I don't like to talk about it. Usually, you know, when you tell people you've seen a sea serpent, they think you've had too much whisky. At any rate, the one I saw was about 60 feet long and looked very much like the Scottish one described in the papers. It was in mid-Pacific, three years ago. Another man was with me and saw it also."

Cosmetic Chart Explains Spring Color Harmony

Rouge, Lipstick, Powder Combinations Shown at a Glance.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

A Washington beauty salon has a brand new method of keeping up with the times. As soon as it was possible the salon keepers ascertained what the outstanding spring colors would be and drafted a chart of these colors with the corresponding rouge, lipstick, powder, eye shadow and perfume which will be most suitable for each color, both for daytime and evening wear.

They list as the most important colors, Chinese rust, linbeige, perfume green, starlight blue, and lipstick rose. On their chart they have examples of these five shades, with the proper cosmetics alongside.

Many women who have feared certain colors all their lives because somebody said one time or other that blondes couldn't wear this, and brunettes that, will find what a large color scope they actually have if they will include the proper make-up.

Versatility of Cosmetics.

There are a lot of people who claim they can't wear red. The chances are that if a woman with that conviction were to consult a beauty expert, find out what colors of lipstick, rouge and powder suited both her coloring and the red, she'd be amazed to see how becoming it might be to her.

In many instances a woman will see a blonde wearing a certain color beautifully and if she happens to be a brunette will conclude that such a color would never do on her. On the contrary it might. The delightful thing about the variety of cosmetics on the market now is that they enable us—if we know how to use them properly—to wear almost any color we like.

In view of the intriguing new spring shades it would be an excellent thing to drop by this beauty salon and take a peep at the chart.

Liquor Label Towels.

Somewhat on the same order as the John Held, jr., cocktail towels we spoke of the other day are some new ones gayly decorated with prints of original labels.

These make fascinating informal table covers for the afternoon cocktail tray, and are most appropriate for bar spreaders.

Little napkins also with original label prints may be bought with the towels, or separately.

Cheese Puzzle Solved.

Every hostess knows there's a cheese problem, but every hostess doesn't know there's a simple solution to it.

If the plans are for cheese after dinner, or simply cheese spreads for the cocktail hour, the question is "What kind of cheese shall I serve?" Although the majority of people like cheeses, there are so many varieties that it is difficult to know which would be the most enjoyable.

A shop here offers boxes containing six kinds of cheese, giving a wide range of choice.

Saga of Dress Shields.

Back in 1882 a certain manufacturer was busy turning out enough earmuffs to satisfy the market. It was a profitable business, but had one drawback. The earmuffs had to be manufactured in the summer, and delivered to the retail merchants in the fall. This scheme of things necessitated closing down the factory in the winter.

The manufacturer sought some product to make during the winter which would be worn in summer. He finally decided upon dress shields. At that time the shields on the market were crude affairs, clumsy as they could be. The factory owner got busy, drew new designs and turned out a product which simply revolutionized the dress shield business. From then on he made subsequent designs, each one an improvement over the others. Today they are sold in several patterns. There are some silk lined, some covered to match linings, and others mounted on net garments to suit any dress, any time.

These products were so gladly received that the manufacturer's business boomed. Before long he was putting out rubber sheeting, shower curtains, bathing caps, baby pants, household aprons and many articles in which rubber is combined with fabric, such as girdles, tourist cases, powder-puff pockets and bibs.

Some shower curtains backed by the manufacturer's guarantee are on sale now for $1.95. They come in floral designs, yellow, lavender, blue, peach, green and black with white.

Dear Miss Davis: They say that budgets are very fine things, but mine is having disastrous results. For the sake of economy I let my maid go, and started doing my own lingerie, and washing up breakfast and luncheon dishes. Since the third day of my program the cuticle around my nails has become brittle and breaks off. I would appreciate your advice. M. M.

Dear M. M.—It appears you will have to arrange your budget to include a bottle of olive oil. Use this on your hands every night, rubbing it well into the cuticle. Try wearing rubber gloves when you wash dishes.

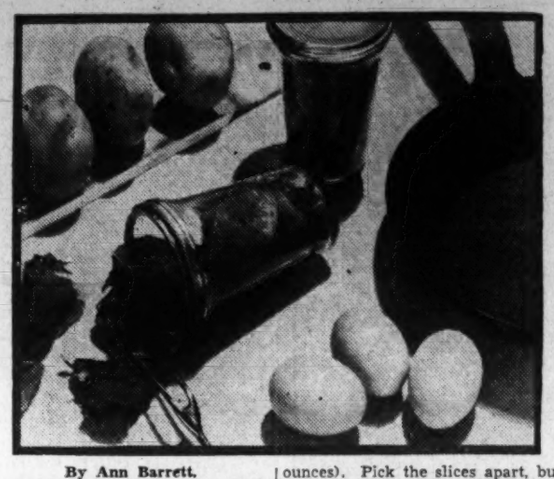
Frizzle Your Dried Beef For Best-Flavored Dishes



By Ann Barrett.

Frizzle is the chief trick when it comes to cooking dried beef. Not only in the combination of scrambled eggs and dried beef, which is prima donna Jeritza's first choice in breakfast dishes. But in creamed dried beef served with a mealy baked potato for lunch. Or dried beef chummed up with cheese and tomato—in one of the best chafing dishes that ever cheered up a late supper.

Frizzle means just what it sounds like—cooking the beef in butter over a fairly hot flame (about 3 minutes) till the edges curl and the beef browns. (But first, it's a good precaution—unless you like food extra salty— to let the beef stand in boiling water 10 minutes, then drain.)

Frizzled Beef and Eggs.

Here's how this trick works in the celebrated dried-breef-and-scrambled-egg dish. Start with a jar of dried beef (about 7 or 8 ounces). Pick the slices apart, but don't break them up. Put beef in saucepan, pour over 1 cup boiling water, and let stand 10 minutes over low fire. Then drain thoroughly. Next, melt ¼ cup butter in heavy skillet, put in beef, and toss it about in the butter over quick fire, till brown. Then heap this up on a hot platter, with plenty of scrambled eggs. Or—if you'd like your eggs cooked right with your dried beef—do this: After you've browned the beef (use only about 3 ounces) turn over it 8 eggs (first beaten up with 4 tablespoons milk and ¼ teaspoon pepper). Cook over low flame, stirring constantly with fork, till eggs are done.

Creamed Frizzled Beef.

For creamed dried beef, start again with a 7 or 8-ounce jar of meat. Parboil it, drain it and frizzle it brown in 4 tablespons butter. Then sprinkle over 3 tablespoons flour, and blend this in well. Next, slowly add 1½ cups rich milk (or 1 cup milk and ½ cup cream) and stir constantly till mixture thickens. Then add ⅛ teaspoon pepper and turn mixture over hot buttered toast. Or serve with baked potato or steamed rice. A slice or two of hot, hard-cooked egg to each serving makes a nice garnish.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

How's Your Liver?

The medical fraternity has a complex on the liver and especially on torpid liver. When a patient appears in a physician's office and begins to talk about his liver being torpid he is liable to head into stormy weather. The physician may indulge in abuse, if he is of that type, or he may indulge in ridicule if he is of another type. Whatever track he takes he is apt to impress his patient with the notion that the doctor does not think highly of torpid liver.

The reason for the reaction is the general prevalence of loose talk about the liver. Almost all of those who complain about torpid liver have the constipation habit. Many of them are accustomed to taking calomel to stir up the liver on slight provocation. Physicians know that 90 per cent of the calomel used as a remedy is not necessary and much of it does more harm than good. They think that however valuable calomel is when properly taken, it is valueless when improperly taken, and there is no evidence that it "stirs up the liver."

A large part of those who come to see physicians for torpid liver and billiousness really need to see themselves. They need to know that what they need is to eat and drink less and to work and exercise more—and that information they should be able to get at home. In fact, all that is required is a willingness to face the facts and to act upon them. This is the purpose in mind when physicians belittle the liver. What they say is far from representing their views on the importance of the liver, from the standpoint of the bodily welfare.

The most important part of the liver work has to do with the secretion of the stomach juices and the manufacture of blood. Discovery of means of curing pernicious anemia, using the word cure in a certain sense, has taught us much about the liver.

The liver has much to do with the body's disposal of sugars and fats. In the treatment of diabetes the condition of the liver must be studied.

Susan Mills' Post-WJSV Recipes

Valencia Rice (Spanish Style).

Warm a quarter pint of the best olive oil, put in a quarter pound of picked and scalded rice, ¾ pound of veal or fowl cut in small pieces. Add 3 fresh tomatoes, 1 chopped onion, garlic, parsley, saffron, pepper and salt. Stir in the hot oil for a quarter of an hour. Add ½ pint of water or broth. Cover the casserole tightly and stew slowly until the rice has drawn up all the liquid. If not tender, add more water or stock. Strain off any remaining oil and place the rice together with the meat on a dish.

A vegetable, such as green peas, may be added about 15 minutes before serving. Other vegetables, such as mushrooms or hearts of artichokes, may be added, but these must be cooked beforehand.

Beggars All

By Katharine Newlin Burt

The Story Thus Far.

Rafe Courvoisier, last heir of an impoverished Southern family is released from a secret outlaw rendezvous by Madrone on his promise to obey Madrone's orders. He becomes a boatman at Candle Island, his old home, now owned by Hortense Kendall. She is vaguely in love with Rafe, but he gives her no encouragement because he considers himself Madrone's slave. She becomes engaged to Randal Crewe. Rafe discovers that her guardian, Harmon Jay, is Madrone's man and that all the servants on the island are connected with the outlaw. Madrone visits Rafe, who develops a certain sympathy for him, warns him that he has enemies on the island. In aiding Madrone to escape, Rafe is shot. When he regains consciousness he finds himself in an out-of-the-way room of the mansion. Madrone is his jailer.

Hearing a movement in the passage, she raised her voice to a high conversational key. "I stay and gossip with you. That will tire you, perhaps. But they say Signor Tasket has lost his money; he will sell all his horses, his Virginia estate. He has gone away lately to sell everything to pay his debts. Yes, I thought you would be interest' to hear. It will not be happy for his lady now. She will be poor and she has lost her amante——"

"Maddalena," said Rafe, "you must get me out of this. Or you must bring Miss Kendall here to see me."

Maddalena shrugged. "I do not dare, Mr. Courvoisier."

"What have they told you about me?"

"Only that no one is to know you are here."

"Maddalena"—he caught her hand, pulled her down close—"if I tell you something, I am sure you will help me. Bend close. I love your child. I love Hortense——" his heart seemed to bleed out the words. "I think I can save her, make her happy, if you will help me to get away from here."

Kick Against Door.

"Pst!" Maddalena straightened sharply. Someone was kicking against the door. "Give me your tray now. I must go. I will bring you back your clothes which I have wash. And I will bring you others. I must go now." She made a strange gesture of rolling her head, her eyes, her tongue in her mouth. It meant collusion, secrecy and, he dared hope, the will to help him. And then she went over, rapped and was let out quickly into the hall.

That afternoon, Hortense sat in another room of the house, thinking. She had envisaged herself for this possible marriage with Randal Crewe, but no sooner had Jay arrived than he had caught the experimental impulse of her will and transformed it into an immediate ruthlessness of speed. He could remain, it seemed, only for a few days. While he was on Candle Island, the matter had better be brought to a conclusion. The marriage should be celebrated on Saturday. No need of a church wedding. Let Crewe invite as many relatives and friends as might be reasonable out to the island for a house party. Let him bring out his clergyman. Jay would interview the ordinary, who could probably be induced to bring out the necessary license papers. There was nothing that Harmon Jay, cold, hard, and smoothly active, could not and would not do to get his ward married safely and in haste and off upon her wedding journey.

Randal went to and fro across the harbor water, playing his part of an accepted lover as neatly as a marionette, but with a dazed look in his eyes. As for the red-haired boatman, he did not reappear. Hortense told Jay curtly that he had been dismissed.

To which Jay returned no comment.

"He's like a spider," thought Hortense. "He scares me." Aloud she said suddenly, "You know something about Rafe Courvoisier."

She and her guardian were in her little morning room at the moment of this interview, which took place not in the morning, but in the late hours of the day. Jay had her usual place at the desk, where he was writing with a long finely pointed pencil some crabbed program of events.

Recounts Rafe's Career.

"To be sure I do," Jay answered. "I would hardly have recommended his living on the island if I had not known considerable about him. Considerable."

"You can't possibly know 'considerable!'" Hortense and her guardian had never been on friendly, scarcely even on polite terms; her manner to him was often insolent and his to her cold, with repressed dislike. "He's been away from Chetteraw since he was 15. He has been, I happen to know, a gambler and, after that, a common sailor. He was shipwrecked a year ago and turned up only this spring in rags and has never told a word of his life in that long interval. What do you know about him that can be called 'considerable?'"

"I know, for one instance," said Jay, "just precsiely where he was during that year."

Hortense went white. She turned away, remembering the terrible weight and urgency of Rafe's confidence.

"Do you know, perhaps?" Jay queried icily, but in the complete security of irony.

"Do you imagine that I am in his confidence? But I think that I should know. And I think I should know why you have known. I engaged him for a boatman——"

Jay interrupted her,

"Why trouble yourself about him? He's gone now. You have more profitable things to think about." He looked down at the paper in his hand. "You have a wedding dress?"

Hortense charged over to him, faced him across the desk and set upon its top both of her fisted hands.

"No. I have not. I must tell you that I am not sure that I will be married on Saturday to Randal Crewe."

Jay Thrusts Back Chair.

Jay thrust back his chair a trifle. "We are all sure of that," he said. "How can you be?"

"I don't have to remind you what consequences——"

"Suppose I don't care for the consequences—suppose I prefer to walk out of this house, to go away from this island——"

"Hortense, you are no longer a child. But I know that I can bring to bear upon you such pressure that even a woman of strong will and temper might prefer to yield. But it is foolish to threaten you. This man is your own choice. You have encouraged and accepted him. We have gone too far in our support, our help of him, to make an eleventh-hour decision of such insolence, such cruelty. This morning's papers announce your engagement and your wedding day. Crewe's creditors have read that announcement. 'Well—what do you say?"

For the girl had turned away and put her hand up uncertainly to her eyes.

"I haven't anything to say. It's my own doing," she acknowledged. "I wish I knew whether it is right."

"You may take my word for that."

She was about to leave the room by the window of Rafe's usual entrance, but she stopped and looked back at him stormily.

"I've never taken your word for anything, Mr. Jay, especially not for matters of right and wrong. To my instinct you are all wrong, inside and out and always."

Sound of Contempt.

He made a dry, small sound of contempt and ridicule and she fled from him.

She turned into one of the hedged paths and followed it in an unusual direction across the island toward the kitchen gardens.

The path ended in a cuplike, circular space hedged very high except for one opening. This was gated and narrow. Leaning against this gate and looking down into the garden stood a man, broad and strong in figure. His back was turned, but Hortense knew instantly from his outline that he was a stranger.

Christ—Model Story-Teller

With Fine Literary Skill and Human Understanding, Jesus Wrapped Tremendous Truths of Kingdom in Homely Parables.

By William T. Ellis.

Over and over again persons say to me, "Tell us more about the Lake of Galilee." They can not hear enough about that lovely lake, mostly rimmed by brown and barren shores, on which and beside which Jesus taught his deathless truths. As a matter of fact, the really important thing about Galilee is what Jesus said there; and the record of these utterances is as accessible and as clear to the untraveled person as it is to one who, like myself, has swum and fished and sailed in and on these waters; and who has dwelt happily by its shores. Today's Sunday school lesson is an echo from the Lake of Galilee; and here we have, in Matthew's brilliant record, a cluster of the stories told by Jesus, the greatest of teachers.

Does it seem a simple point to stress that the essential truths of Christianity are all accessible to everybody? A woman stood beside the newest treasure of the British Museum, the Codex Sinaiticus, recently bought by England from Russia, which had it from Tischendorff, who stole it from the Greek monastery at Sinai. She marveled at this beautiful manuscript of the New Testament, written about 350 A. D., and she said to the attendant, "Has it ever been translated?" He replied, "Madam, the King James Version is a very good translation." There are many persons in England today who are excited over the Codex Sinaiticus, whose own Bibles have been unopened for years. The important thing about Bible lands and Bible versions is that the living truth which makes them significant is accessible to everybody in Christendom.

Educated Away From Lore.

Before printing became general, people carried truths in their memories, in the form of stories and proverbs. That is still the manner of the East. We have been educated away from the simple wisdom of plain folk, with their store of proverbial philosophy.

But Jesus talked to simple-minded hearers—how He loved the common people—who would treasure His stories and sayings. So, "Without a parable spake He not unto them." All the parables deal with the Kingdom of Heaven. We talk more about the church than about the kingdom, whereas the latter is greater. All of the true church is in the kingdom, but not all of the kingdom is in the church. This kingdom, which has no frontiers, is ever growing in its sway, around the whole world. Its citizens are more numerous than those of any earthly emperor; and its might is beyond all battleships, air fleets, armies and diplomacy. Today's hope for a muddled and distraught world lies in the extension of the kingdom.

"Wee Bobbie Moffatt."

In the parable of the mustard seed Jesus pictured the growth to greatness of the kingdom from tiniest sources. The seed is small but the tree is large. We may not despise the day of small things.

In a familiar story, it is told that a Scotch pastor lamented the unfruitfulness of his work. He said he had not taken in a single new member, "except wee Bobbie Moffatt." Yet that "wee Bobbie" became the great missionary, Robert Moffatt, a major general in the kingdom's war.

Something over a generation ago, a famous Baptist evangelist named Jordan undertook services in one of the stanchly Presbyterian cities of North Carolina. He conducted services for three weeks, and then confessed failure; for he had only one convert to baptize, an uncouth youth named Robertson. That youth, however, became America's greatest New Testament Greek scholar, who is still a famous teacher and preacher and author, Prof. A. T. Robertson, of Louisville Baptist Seminary. No; we can not weigh or measure the potentiality of a mustard seed.

For a Yeasty World.

These are yeasty days in all the world—to cite the next parable—and the leaven that is working is the leaven of the kingdom. The whole lump of life is being leavened by the kingdom. We have not made enough of the fact that the "New Deal" in the United States is but a putting into effect of measures of social justice for which Christian leaders and church councils have been crusading for a generation. Would that Walter Rausenbusch could have lived to see this day! The best reassurance that timid souls who are panicky about the vast innovations can have is the clear truth that the whole trend is toward kingdom goals.

In ways past all describing the influence of the teachings of Jesus is today permeating the whole world—bringing in a new passion for peace; a new revolt against social inequities; a new resolution to end the exploitation of the many by the few; a new era of liberty for women and of freedom from child labor. This world, despite superficial signs to the contrary, is growing rapidly better, and moving toward the kingdom goal. The leaven is working.

The Treasure Hunt.

Every few days the papers tell us of some new expedition setting out in search for buried treasure; like the man in the parable, who found a fortune in his field. All over the East natives are scrabbling in the earth, rifling ancient tombs and otherwise seeking for hidden riches.

Of course, the idea that Jesus stressed in His story was of the supreme worth of the kingdom. To find all else, and to miss this supreme spiritual satisfaction is to die poor. Until men and women get clearly into their minds the truth that the greatest values of all—the thing which alone is worth working and dying for—is the establishment of the reign of the kingdom, affairs will continue to be all a-kelter. Once we learn to live by kingdom laws, we shall have solved our crime problem, our war problem, our economic problem, our social problem.

In another story, that of the pearl of great price, for the possession of which the merchant sold all that he had, Jesus pictured this same thought of the superlative value of the kingdom. He adverted to the theme many times; for He saw clearly the universal tragedy of men's giving their souls for things not worth while.

We Go A-Fishing.

Another parable likened the kingdom of heaven to a great net cast into the sea, which brought in all manner of fish, some of which were eaten, and some cast away. Every fisherman appreciates this tale. Early this week I was fishing in the Gulf of Mexico, and my first catch was a sea-bat, a curious creature that had no place in the frying pan with the sea-trout that I caught.

This is a good story for persons who are troubled by Christians who are not to their own taste. There seems a queer perversity in most of our noddles which wants everyone to conform to our own little standards. Suppose we accept the parable of the net and the fishes as the day's teaching for us. The kingdom net is far more inclusive than some of us think it should be. We want ourselves to do the separating of the good from the bad. But the Master says that such is none of our business, "There are hypocrites in the church," we cry. Doubtless; but there are no hypocrites in heaven. "There are heretics abroad." Who gave us the Day-of-Judgment wisdom to discriminate? Perhaps our own complacency and censoriousness is more heretical than the beliefs of those we assail? Anyhow, the final decision is not with us, but with God.

Bishop Strider Ends Sermons

Speaks on "Mediocrity" in Final Message at Epiphany.

The Rt. Rev. R. E. L. Strider, Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of West Virginia, concluded his series of five sermons at the noonday services at the Church of the Epiphany yesterday, speaking before a large congregation. His subject was "The Lure of the Mediocre." He said:

"Jesus came to make people dissatisfied with the old and lesser satisfactions with which we are so often content and to give us a vision of a richer and finer life. It is strange how we modern people yield to the lure of the mediocre.

"In regard to the lower things of life, like automobiles, clothes and possesisons, we want the best but we are very careless in our choice of the highest brand of life. Perhaps this is one of the things that is the matter with our world and Jesus came to change it when He says, 'I am come that you might have life and that ye may have it more abundantly.'"

"The Poor Rich" Opens Week's Engagement at the Rialto—Prizes Are Awarded

Stellar Group Of Comics Are Plot Victims!

"THE POOR RICH." Universal production of a screen play by Ebba Havez and Dale Van Every, featuring Edna May Oliver, Edward Everett Horton, Leila Hyams, Thelma Todd, Grant Mitchell, Andy Devine, John Miljan and Ed Brophy. Directed by Edward Sedgwick. Reviewed Thursday evening.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Thoroughly innocuous, but not too funny during much of its attenuated footage, this comedy of the impecunious seems to have suffered the inevitable disadvantage of having had a two-reel idea stretched into a feature-length picture.

"The Poor Rich" is poor in story treatment and rich only in promises which it fails to fulfill.

It is, in the first place, lamentably slow in getting up a sufficient head of steam to get itself moving; once in motion at a fair comedy clip, it ends too soon. This, obviously, is a matter that might be neatly wrapped and laid on the doorstep of the director.

In point of comic personalities there is nothing poor about "The Poor Rich." It bristles with names indelibly associated in the mind of the habitual picture-goer with laughter—Edna May Oliver, Edward Everett Horton, Grant Mitchell, Thelma Todd, Andy Devine, Leila Hyams, Ed Brophy, Una O'Connor, E. E Clive, John Miljan, all these know their way to town and are equal to anything that is put upon them in the way of fun. Unfortunately, there is not enough of the latter to go around in a tale which centers itself in the false hopes of four groups of penniless adventurers intent each on extracting important moneys from the others.

The Cheating Cheaters.

There is, for example, the "scout" for an antique dealer, who plants herself in "Spottiswoode Manor" to acquire for a song pieces of priceless furniture; there are, too, the two cousins, joint owners of the dilapidated premises—Miss Oliver and Mr. Horton—who plan to entertain the fabulously rich Lord and Lady Featherstone and their daughter, Gwen, who haven't a cent among them, either, but are accepting the hospitality of their American friends in the hope of acquiring a competence.

Then comes along the bogus Prince Abdul, Oriental soothsayer, who has got himself into a pretty jam with the law and seeks a modest "ten grand" as the means of a quick getaway. Poor old Andy Devine just happens in as a lad of all work—principally cookery—who is helpful in many ways.

How It Comes Out.

In the end, Gwen becomes inordinately interested in Mr Devine—Gwen would be the blondely seductive Miss Thelma Todd—Albert Stuyvesant Spottiswoode decides upon Miss Hyams, the antique seeker-outer, Mr. Horton being the Mr. Spottiswoode in question; and Miss Oliver plights a pretty troth with the deputy sheriff, who has loved her from afar ever since the day he delivered the ice cream at the mansion for her going-away party. That would be Grant Mitchell. And that's the way it goes, the old manse, meanwhile, having been converted into a roadhouse specializing in chicken dinners, although I believe no mention was made of "Maryland style."

There is, as goes without saying, a good deal to laugh at in this utterly innocent story of fortune hunting, but not as much as there should be.

Better Than Their Roles.

Edward Everett Horton does his utmost with a role that is not inherently as amusing as the authors evidently thought, and much the same handicap is placed upon the ample talents of Edna May Oliver. Miss Hyams has one funny scene in which Mr. Horton attempts to revive her from a fainting spell and Mr. Clive is a "silly awss" Englishman to the life. In fact, one is almost constrained to believe that he must be one!

Of them all, Andy Devine seemed to these eyes to fare best, although Mr Brophy has a keenly satirical few minutes as an overstuffed plain clothes man from headquarters.

The supplementary bill embraces a new issue of the Universal News, with Mr. McNamee's lusty comment adding interest to such "hot" items as the President's recent plea for the NRA at Constitution Hall, and "The Vaudeville Parade," introducing a surprising number of clever performers, led by Harry Hirshfield, Eddie Peabody, Gypsy Nina, Jack McLallen—without Sarah—and a long list of others.

On the letterhead of The Lambs, 130 West Forty-fourth street, New York, comes the following just in time to make this space:

"Dear Nelson Bell: Greetings from the big city! I am singing a few coster songs on Sunday, next, over WJZ, here at 8 p. m., on the radio hour. You may say to me, 'Thanks for the warning!' I give you the news for what it is worth. Kind regards. Yours very sincerely,

"Clifford Brooke."

So now you know and can use your own judgment about the dialing!

Checks in the Mail.

Mrs. Leslie Frank, Mrs. James Gallagher and Miss Ann Darlington by this time should have received their checks from the Drama Guild of Washington for their prize-winning plays in the one-act playwriting contest, recently held by the guild. The plays were: "What Makes Women Happy," by Mrs. Frank; "A Deed of Trust," by Mrs. Gallagher, and "The House of the Star," by Miss Darlington.

It is of interest to note that Mrs. Frank also won the three-act play-writing contest recently held by the Arts Club of Washington.

These three plays will be presented by the Drama Guild on April 10, in the West Presbyterian Church. Tryouts for parts in these plays will be held at the Thompson School on March 15, at 8 p. m. Any member of the Drama Guild may enter the competition for a place in the casts.

The presentation of these plays is one of the special functions of the new talent committee of the guild, of which Mrs. Jane Plummer Rice is chairman. The tryouts will be conducted by the directors of each of the plays, assisted by a selected group of judges.

"A Deed of Trust" will be directed by Frank Jamison; "The House of the Star," by Anton Hardt, and "What Makes a Woman Happy," by Miss Rachael Miller.

There is a rumor afloat that some time in April Polly Moran will renew a large number of pleasant Washington acquaintanceships by making another week of personal appearances on a local stage. The last time she was here Miss Moran tilted the town right up on edge, no less!

Arts Club Premiere.

Speaking of Mrs. Frank and her success in the recent playwriting contests, Maurice Jarvis, as king, and Virginia True, as princess, of the mythical kingdom of Sertilia head a cast of 22 players who will be seen in "The Queen's Gambit," at the Arts Club of Washington next Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings, March 13, 14 and 15.

The play, which won this year's competition, was written, as already noted, by Mrs. Leslie Frank, of Chevy Chase, and is being given a special production by the Arts Club with scenery designed by Hugo Inden, prominent Washington artist of the German modern school.

Mrs. Maude Howell Smith, herself one of the Capital's most gifted players, will be hostess at the club dinner Tuesday evening preceding the play; Miss Sibyl Baker on Wednesday evening and Miss Juliet Lyeth and William J. McManus on Thursday.

Personal aside to Wilma Wright Flood, 2112 F street northwest: Certainly we enjoy getting "fan mail"—why not? And thank you very much. Perhaps it is because we do not broadcast from a prepared script, but just sit down by the mike and "ad lib" until Announcer Larry Elliott waves us down. It seems to be easier that way for all concerned. And thanks again.

A Famous Role.

Wendell Whitten, who will be seen here as "Rip Van Winkle," when the Children's Theater, of New York, brings this, its fifth play of the season, to the National Theater this Satrday morning at 10:30, is perhaps enjoying his most popular role.

From every city, in which the play has been presented this year, come enthusiastic reports of this young actor's portrayal of the old part. This brings to mind the opposition encountered by Thomas Jefferson when he first dared to essay the character made famous by his father on the American stage over a period of 40 years.

"Rip Van Winkle" first saw the American stage as early as 1829. Various actors played Rip, among them the elder Hackett. In 1850, Charles Burke, a half-brother of Joseph Jefferson, appeared in it; and a decade later Jefferson himself enjoyed a successful tour of Australia in it; and on the evening of September 5, 1865, he made his first appearance before a London audience.

The play completely captivated London, and through it Jefferson leaped to stardom. With his return to America, he began his long life in the part. His last appearance as Rip was at Paterson, N. J., May 2, 1904.

Bequeathed to Son.

Then he turned over all of Rip's properties to his son, Thomas, expressing the wish that he would follow him in the part. He said, "I am 75, you know, and so, entitled to be old. I belonged to the stage from birth. My son Tom is the fifth of the line of acting Jeffersons from the first, who played with Garrick. Tom is playing Rip. I saw him play it, and he does it well."

But Joseph Jefferson's public were loyal and devoted, they were loathe to accept another in his place as Rip, and in spite of his father's approval, and the fact that he had successfully barnstormed the West in the part for seven years, Thomas Jefferson was looked upon in the East by his father's admirers as an usurper.

Even Grover Cleveland, intimate friend of the elder Jefferson, could not bring himself to see the son in the role. However, later he did, and to newspaper reporters, who were anxious to question him as to the result of an important meeting, he could talk of nothing but "the best performance I have seen for years."

And what could be more timely than Rip's old toast: "Here's to your goot health, may you liff long und prosper?"

Visits Noted Browning Collection

During her recent tour through Texas, Katharine Cornell presented Rudolf Besier's "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" in Waco Hall, Baylor University, Waco, where there is the largest Robert Browning collection in the world. The photograph shows the actress looking at the Clasped Hands, the cast having been taken from the actual hands of the Brownings by Miss Harriet Hosmer. Miss Cornell recently played the role of Elizabeth Barrett for the 600th time in America.

Culpeper Aroused By Mystery Death

Aged Man's Body Found in Stream; 7 Arrested.

Culpeper, Va., March 9 (Spl.).—Culpeper County is aroused over the finding today of the body of Thomas Tappy, sr., in a stream some miles from his home at Brown's Store and the arrest of seven men of that community for questioning.

Tappy, about 74, had been missing since Monday. When he did not return home the Culpeper Fire Company and citizens began search. Tappy's ax and hat were found near a moonshine still yesterday.

A head wound and burns on his clothing indicate foul play, but Coroner J. Laurence Stringfellow has not decided whether to hold an inquest. One daughter of Tappy is Mrs. Asby Rosson, of Reva.

Traffic Is Halted By Rainelle Flood

Houses Anchored and Cars Forced to Detour.

Rainelle, W. Va., March 9 (Spl.).—Business was at a standstill here this week as a result of the thaw, which caused Meadow Creek to flood the business section with 3 feet of water.

Many houses were anchored to prevent them from being washed away, and heavy losses were suffered by most merchants. Boats were used to transport guests to the King Coal Hotel, and traffic on the Midland Trail was suspended, Charleston-bound cars being forced to detour through Beckley.

Through traffic has been resumed, although the highway is still covered with water.

30 CWA Painters Strike on Pay Cut

Majority Return Following Conference.

Danville, Va., March 9 (Spl.).—Thirty CWA painters on city school projects struck today when told their wage scale had been cut from $1.10 to 60 cents an hour.

Most of them went back to work later, after Howard Hylton, local administrator, explained the orders were from Washington and that he had been instructed to pay all labor on the "prevailing" local scale.

The painters said that with the heavy cut they should be allowed to work longer than 24 hours a week, but Hylton could promise them no increase.

Common labor wages were cut from 45 to 30 cents.

N. Y. Police Seek Man Under Arrest at Elkins

New York, March 9 (AP).—Charles Minotta, 44, reported under arrest at Elkins, W. Va., today, is wanted here for the murder of Joseph Boldonza, 57, his cousin, police said.

Boldonza was fatally stabbed September 4 last, allegedly during a fight with Minotta.

Virginia House Approves Plan To Aid Schools

Passes Bill Providing Full Term This Year by Literary Loans.

Richmond, March 9 (AP).—The House of Delegates late yesterday passed the Hall-Rhodes bill allowing the Department of Education to lend to localities money in the literary fund with delinquent tax tickets as security to assure an eight months' school term during the present year.

Asserting that the administration program would assure an eight months' term during the next biennium, Delegate W. N. Neff, of Washington County, had the Hall-Rhodes bill amended to make it effective for only one year.

Both houses today refused to make changes in the election laws. The House killed the Miller bill to permit affirmative voting in lieu of the present method of scratching all names except that of the chosen candidate, while the Senate put to sleep the House bill to open the polls from 6 a. m. to 6 p. m. instead of the present "sunrise-to-sunset" hours.

The House passed a long list of Senate bills, and killed three. Among the measures killed was the Garrett-Smith bill to prohibit the Governor from making appointments to fill judicial vacancies in the circuit courts.

The House passed a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment to permit special legislation when a subject can not be reached by general law.

The Cather Senate bill provided that audits of local officers shall be paid for by the localities, except that the State must accept audits made by a certified public accountant or make the audit at State expense.

Bills were passed in the House defining Chincoteague oysters and prohibiting the importation of oysters from Japan and other foreign countries.

One resolution passed by the two houses urged the Federal Government to establish an artillery school in Virginia, and another asked the Commission of Fisheries to confer with Maryland authorities to make the State boundary line more definite by means of buoys.

The board voted an appropriation of $500 for the purchase of a lighting system for the Sparta High School. L. D. Pitts and Francis Pitts were appointed to investigate the types of lighting equipment best suited to the school's needs and to make the purchases.

Smith, of Baltimore, executor of the estate of Mrs. Rosalia B. Smith, the court upheld certain cash bequests made by Mrs. Smith in her will for masses. The court also decided that $1,100 on deposit in the First National Bank of Mount Savage in the joint account of Mrs. Smith and Father Smith, belongs to the estate and not to the priest.

The court held that the attempted bequest by Mrs. Smith of her furniture is void. It was also ruled that the executor has no authority to sell two parcels of real estate in Mount Savage, and further held that the equity court will appoint trustees to sell the real estate and assume jurisdiction of the estate.

Certain attempted bequests written upon the will underneath Mrs. Smith's signature were held null and void.

Shoemaker's Assault Case Trial Delayed

Lawmaker Trailed by Crowd as He Quits Courtroom.

"What's That?" He Asks Officer Before "No Parking" Sign.

Representative Francis H. Shoemaker parked his automobile between two "no parking" signs in front of Police Court yesterday, went inside to wait an hour and 5 minutes for continuance of assault charges against him, then returned to his car and jovially posed before a battery of photographers.

While he waited arraignment before Judge Isaac Hitt, Charles Newman, taxi driver, who claims the Representative assaulted him appeared in District Supreme Court and filed a $25,000 damage suit. His attorney, Harry Friedman, asked damages on four counts.

Shoemaker appeared in court yesterday nearly a half hour before his case was scheduled. He arrived before the building with his secretary, got out, locked his machine. A "no parking" sign stood less than a foot away. A policeman approached.

Photographers Jam Court.

"This isn't another assault, is it?" the Minnesotan laughingly inquired.

The policeman glanced at Congressional tags on the car and said nothing.

Reporters and photographers jammed the small courtroom. Shoemaker quietly entered and took a seat in the rear. For more than an hour he listened to a varied assortment of cases. A colored shoplifter had just been tried when his name was called.

"I would like to have a continuance to the latter part of next week," he told Judge Hitt. "My attorney's wife is sick and he was unable to appear."

"Who is your attorney?" the judge asked.

"Representative Raymond L. Cannon, of Wisconsin."

Judge Hitt set the hearing date for next Thursday.

A crowd followed the Representative from court. Downstairs, he posed for photographs, waved his hand to the crowd, drove off—but not until he had walked around the "no parking" sign to unlock his machine.

Cannon Is Undecided.

Representative Cannon, widely known as a criminal lawyer, indicated last night he had not decided whether to represent Shoemaker.

"I like at least an hour and a half to prepare a case," he said. "Shoemaker did not call me until a few minutes before he was due in court."

Cannon also explained he was a member of the House elections subcommittee, which passed on Shoemaker's eligibility to membership in Congress.

Newman's civil suit alleges Shoemaker "threatened to kill this plaintiff, using vile, vulgar, obscene and profane language."

Shoemaker's arrest on assault charges followed several hours of "hide and seek" with detectives attempting to serve a warrant. He was found in the House Office Building Thursday night and ordered to post $25 collateral.

Demands Exceed Car Production

Factories Have Work for Two Months.

Detroit, March 9 (AP).—With an accumulation of unfilled orders on hand sufficient to require full speed factory operations for the next several weeks, the motorcar industry finds itself today in the position of being unable to catch up with retail demand, due largely to tdifficulty encountered in obtaining raw materials.

A slight increase in production volume was noted during the current week, with an estimated 73,600 units running off the assembly lines, but the upward trend has not kept pace with the demands from retailers.

Exact figures on the number of orders remaining to be filled have not been made public, but the accumulation is expected to continue ahead of production throughout March and a large part of April because of an apparent certainty that the producers will not be able to obtain materials this month in the desired volume.

Governor to Open Farm Parley Today

Organization Leaders to Attend Iowa Meeting.

Des Moines, March 9 (AP).—Gov. Herring of Iowa will deliver an address of welcome tomorrow to anyone who shows up for a conference on agricultural problems.

It will not, however, be a "governors' conference"—just a conference, Gov. Herring insisted today. Originally 15 State executives were invited when Gov. Olson of Minnesota called the parley several weeks ago.

Decision to hold the general agricultural parley, with all farm organization leaders invited, was reached after a number of governors indicated they could not attend.

Greta Nissen Plans Mexican Divorce

Hopes to Remain "Friend" of Husband.

London, March 9 (U.P.).—The marriage of Greta Nissen, Norwegian screen star, and Weldon Heyburn, will end in a Mexican divorce court, the actress revealed today.

Rumors of divorce action followed their separation, but not until today did the actress confirm her intentions to regain her freedom. They were married in March, 1932.

"Friendship offers no basis for a happy marriage," she said. "Mr. Heyburn and I prefer divorce in the hope of preserving our friendship."

Relief Delay Spurs Allen To Shake-Up

Children Without Shoes Forced to Remain Out of School.

A determination to push forward more rapidly in his work of reorganizing the District Emergency Relief was expressed last night by Commissioner George E. Allen after he visited the Eleventh Precinct and learned of the delays which are encountered by those appealing for relief.

In one instance, he learned, a family whose home had literally become a frozen mass of ice because of bursted water pipes waited for three days before a case worker arrived to investigate an appeal for fuel and food. In another case, he was informed, three children were kept from school because the parents were unable to buy shoes for them or to obtain them from relief headquarters.

Patrolmen Altus Moore and William J. Savage, of the Eleventh Precinct, informed Commissioner Allen they are in charge of volunteer relief at that station. They do the work when relief headquarters do not give prompt relief.

The police, Commissioner Allen was told, generally investigate if the family is in immediate need of food. The men of the precinct usually contribute for food, or else donations are asked from grocers.

"Not all of the appeals are genuine," Savage told Commissioner Allen. "We had one appeal and we learned the family had an income of $30 a week and the children were not being sent to school because the parents did not want them to go.

"Sometimes it is days and days before they hear from relief headquarters, and sometimes it takes months. We keep them supplied with some food from surplus funds we have on hand. In one instance a policeman investigated an appeal and found a mother and three children huddled around an oil stove in a house the floors of which were covered with ice caused by bursting water pipe," he said.

The case was reported to relief headquarters and a case investigation was promised for the next day. "It took three days for the social workers to get to the place," the policeman said.

Blair Citizens Win Better Bus Service

East Silver Spring Cars to Pass Through Town.

Improved bus service for Blair, Md., was assured yesterday with announcement that all Washington Rapid Transit buses running to East Silver Spring, Four Corners and Clifton Park will be routed through that community. This service, according to H. K. Hodgson, chairman of the public utilities committee of the Blair Citizens Association, is expected to begin next week.

The buses, Mr. Hodgson reported at a meting of the associaton, will be rerouted by way of Falkland drive to Sligo avenue and then to Georgia avenue, instead of directly up Georgia avenue to the business district of Silver Spring as heretofore.

Following a report that work is to be started shortly on widening Falkland drive, which will form part of the extension of the East-West highway to Takoma Park, the association recommended that a new and wider railroad bridge be built on this street to replace the present 20-foot bridge.

Hill Delegation Will Tour City's Bridges Today

House, Senate Members Will Examine Needs at First Hand.

Members of the Senate and House District sub-committees on appropriations and several District officials will study the city's bridge needs at first hand this afternoon as guests of the Washington Board of Trade, on an inspection tour of Capital spans.

The Chain Bridge and Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge in Southeast Washington, will be given particular attention.

The tour, arranged by George Shinn, chairman of the avenues and bridges committee of the organization, will be in connection with a proposed $15,500,000 six-year bridge building and improvement program suggested by Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways. The party will leave the Senate Office Building at 2 p. m.

The trade boards, avenues and bridges committee, at a luncheon meeting yesterday, gave general approval to Capt. Whitehurst's program, with one exception—a recommendation that the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge be replaced instead of repaired.

The committee recommended that the $15,000 saved from the new Calvert Street Bridge be used in a study of the Pennsylvania avenue replacement. Recommendation also was made that the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge work be advanced to 1936 from 1937, as provided in the Whitehurst program.

Army Bayonets Force Cubans To Keep Jobs

Telephone Company Hard Hit, Operates With Enforced Crew.

Havana, Cuba, March 9 (U.P.).—Bayonets were aimed at Cuba's labor tangle toady and an ultimatum showed the government's firm determination to dominate the situation.

Troops arrested more than 200 technical employes of the Cuban telephone company, and after taking them to the main plant, forced them to work at the point of bayonets. Partial service was resumed earlier with a handful of department heads and a few loyal workers operating.

The ultimatum w. asin connection with the equally crucial strike of port workers, which halted dock activities. President Mendieta has threatened to bring 250 strikebreakers if workers did not return to their jobs.

Telephone officials anticipated a "fight to the finish" and declared "either the company will be badly licked or the syndicate destroyed." Unidentified persons succeeded in cutting several underground cables in the center of Havana last night, interrupting portions of a government interdepartment phone system.

The dock strike hampered sugar-grinding operations due to the lack of sacks. The steamers Munargo and Morro Castle departed today without unloading their freight.

Although President Mendieta was optimistic that a peaceful settlement would be obtained, police arrested 65 strikers, including 18 foreigners.

11 Sailors Hurt In Gas Explosion On Submarine

San Diego, Calif., March 9 (AP).—A gas explosion in the engine room of the U. S. Navy submarine Nautilus seriously injured four members of her crew and left seven others nursing cuts and burns today.

The explosion occurred in a crank case last night while the Nautilus, 100 miles at sea, was making a full-power surface run.

The four more seriously injured men were brought to the Naval Hospital here by the destroyer Barry. The seven others remained aboard the undersea craft, which was expected to reach port late today.

Damage to the submarine was reported not extensive.

The four most seriously injured are Mason Bowen, 30, chief radioman, lacerated scalp; H. N. Springstun, 29, machinist's mate, first-degree burns on face, left hand and forearms; H. S. Young, 28, fireman, fractured jaw, and R. W. Bradshaw, seaman, lacerated scalp.

The Nautilus is commanded by Lieut. Comdr. P. E. Glutting. A V-type submarine, she is one of the largest undersea craft in existence.

Puerto Ricans Seek Statehood First Lady Told

Mrs. Roosevelt Says Union Admittance Is Strictly U pto Congress.

Caguas, Puerto Rico, March 9 (AP). Puerto Rico's desire for Statehood should be discussed with Congress, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt said here today.

The wife of the President, asked for her views on a native move to have Puerto Rico join the Union, said she could not express her personal opinion and urged the matter be taken up through political channels.

Mrs. Roosevelt drove here from San Juan and had lunch with 15 girls in a tobacco factory. She tried out a special diet prepared by the girls as part of a nutrition test.

After watching 500 women work with tobacco leaves, Mrs. Roosevelt visited Munoz Rivera School, a Relief Administration project, where tuberculosis prevention work is being done.

Girl Scouts saluted her and groups of pajama-clad children cheered her.

Then, accompanied by Miss Helen V. Tooker, head of a Civil Works and economic survey here, Mrs. Roosevelt visited the homes of tobacco workers.

Puerto Ricans have shown great interest in the "New Deal" since the President's wife arrived at San Juan last night.

She listened patiently to all questions, tried to answer fully, and asked many questions herself. She mad it plain that she wanted all available information on social and economic conditions on the island.

Five Legislators To Try Editor On Contempt

Kentucky House Names Special Committee as Tribunal.

Frankfort, Ky., March 9 (AP).—Five members of the House of the Kentucky Legislature will try Vance Armentrout, associate editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, next Monday night on a charge of contempt for refusing to disclose the name of a legislator who wrote to the newspaper criticizing the speaker and rules committee of the House.

Armentrout told the committee it would be a violation of cconfidence to disclose the name of the author of the "Psalm of Politics," as the article was captioned and which was signed "one who believes in honest government—a member of the House of Representatives."

The five representatives, appointed as a special tribunal to investigate the contempt charge after Armentrout was released on a habeas corpus writ from the county jail where he had been committed for the remainder of the session, today granted a continuance of the trial until Monday.

Armentrout, who is acting editor of the Courier-Journal in the absence of Harrison Robertson, was called for trial today, but his counsel obtained a postponement.

In moving for a continuance until Tuesday, Cary Tabb, Louisville attorney, said, "this is a novel proceeding. I never have had anything like it as long as I have been practicing law."

After trying Armentrout the committee will report to the House whether it considers him in contempt and if so recommend punishment.

Zone Taxicab Likely to Stay Under Budget

1935 Bill to Provide No Funds to Force Meter Use.

Committee Is Petitioned for $133,000 by Van Duzer.

The Congressional mandate which for two years has prevented the Public Utilities Commission from forcing Washington taxicabs to adopt the meter system probably will be retained in the 1935 District budget, it was indicated yesterday.

Members of the District appropriations subcommittee questioned Riley E. Elgen, acting chairman of the commission, at length regarding the ban on meters at yesterday's budget session, but they gave no inkling that they are prepared to change their rule.

The specific amendment states that no part of the appropriations for the Public Utilities Commission may be used to enforce the meter order.

Blanton Renews Attack.

Representative Blanton (Democrat), of Texas, has been the most vigorous defender of the zone-fare cabs on the sub-committee, and he has threatened several times to hold up the salary of William A. Roberts, special assistant corporation counsel for his efforts in behalf of the meter order.

This year, it is understood, Blanton has renewed his attack on Roberts in the committee session and "off the record," but for reasons other than his activity in behalf of meter cabs.

The zone cabs have lost, at least temporarily, their chief champion, however, in the lapse of the office of people's counsel, as Richmond B. Keech has fathered the movement from its inception.

The District budget hearings were adjourned yesterday until Monday, after the committee had listened to justifications of Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer for $10,000 in traffic signals and the customary appropriations for personnel salaries and other expenses.

$50,000 for Signals.

Van Duzer is asking for $133,144 for his department in 1935, of which $50,000 is for signals, equipment, markers and the like.

The Public Utilities Commission, the estimates of which were disposed of yesterday morning, is asking for approximately $88,000, almost all of which is for salaries.

The committee Monday will take up the library estimates, but not the one construction item to build a Georgetown branch library, as that is one of the supplemental estimates before the Budget Bureau.

Radium Firm Leans To Exchange on Debt

Brussels, March 9 (AP).—Officials of the Union Miniere du Haut Katanga, which has a monopoly on the production of radium, today indicated they would consider favorably a proposal by Senator Borah that Belgium give the United States $10,000,000 worth of radium toward war debts payment.

No such offer has been made, it was explained, and no negotiations are under way along this line.

Germany Bars Films With Reich Emigrants

Berlin, March 9 (U.P.).—Officials decided today that foreign films in which German "emigrants" act will be barred in the future.

The decision is a sequel to withdrawal of the British film, "Catherine the Great," after a rowdy premiere. In the film Elizabeth Bergner co-stars with Douglas Fairbanks jr. The audience objected because she is Jewish.

Foxx Signs 1-Year Contract After 2-Minute Conference With Mack

Manager and Star Silent On Terms

Pay Between $18,000 and $20,000 Belief of Experts.

Player Shunned Lower Salary With Bonus Attachments.

MIAMI, Fla., March 9 (AP).—The holdout siege of the major league home-run king, Jimmie Foxx of the Athletics, ended abruptly today when the big first baseman came to salary terms for 1934 with Connie Mack, at a short and amicable conference.

According to Mack, it did not take more than two minutes of conversation to settle their differences, thereby completely dissipating the impression both had previously given that they were prepared to fight it out all spring, if necessary, before yielding any ground whatsoever.

Neither the veteran manager of the Athletics nor his prize slugging pupil would disclose the final terms. It was authoritatively learned, however, that Foxx came to terms for not less than $18,000 and possibly as much as $20,000. Jimmie accepted a one-year contract with no bonus clauses attached

Mack Withholds Terms.

"I have never made it a policy to give out information about our contracts with the players and I do not propose to change now," said Mr. Mack. "You can assume that both parties are satisfied."

Foxx was equally reticent, but indicated he had won his point in getting an increase in salary. He received a little less than $17,000 last season under the terms of a three-year contract he signed in 1931 for a total of $50,000. He was first offered only $11,000 this year, then $15,000 with certain bonus propositions based on the home attendance of the Athletics, and rejected both offers. In turn Foxx demanded $25,000 for a one-year contract, so that the final terms represent a compromise.

Under the bonus plan, which was discarded entirely, Foxx was to get $2,500 extra if the A's drew as many as 600,000 cash customers to Shibe Park this season, and $2,500 more for each 100,000 additional paid patrons. Last year the club only drew about 300,000 at home, but plays Sunday ball this year for the first time.

Foxx to Play Sunday.

Foxx, who has been working out daily in Miami during his holdout siege, will play his first exhibition game Sunday at Miami Beach against the world champion Giants. He was a spectator at today's opening game of the "Grapecruit Circuit," while Lou Finney, a rangy outfielder, held down first base for the Athletics.

The only remaining holdout among the regulars of the A's is Frank ("Pinky") Higgins, of Dallas, Tex., who played a sensational game at third base last year. Higgins, it is understood, was offered a contract calling for the same salary he received in 1933, but has demanded a raise and so far refused even to report.

Students Indorse Coaches at V. P. I.

Express Confidence After Favoritism Charge.

Blacksburg, Va., March 9 (AP).—Virginia Tech's coaching staff was given a unanimous vote of confidence by the cadet corps today at a meeting at which Head Coach Henry B ("Puss") Redd in a lengthy talk explained the coaches' side in regard to charges of favoritism contained in an editorial in the student publication.

Redd said this is "the first time in my 15 years connected with Tech athletics that I've ever been called on to defend myself against charges which reflected on my own integrity and that of the men with whom I work."

Commenting on each of the charges contained in the paper, he said that the coaches had been given no opportunity to be heard and present their side of the question. For that reason, he said, the editorial "is very unfair."

He also set the high mark of the season for a single game by chalking up 12 field goals.

Amassing a grand total of 123 points through the medium of 53 field baskets and 17 free throws, Kitty McElfish, of Allegany High School, topped the scorers of the girls' division.

Giants Score 3 In 9th, Beat A's, 3-2

Rally After Being Held to Two Hits in 8 Innings by Three Rookies.

MIAMA, Fla., March 9 (AP).—In their characteristic manner, the world champion New York Giants staged one of their late-inning rallies today to come from behind and defeat the revamped Philadelphia Athletics, 3 to 2, in the opening game of the exhibition baseball season.

Held to two hits by three rookie hurlers from Oklahoma City, of the Texas League, through the first eight innings, the Giants, with most of the regulars sitting on the bench, cut loose with a savage four-hit attack that netted the champions all of their runs.

Triple Starts Rally.

Alton Benton, who followed Harry Matuzak and Vernon Kennedy on the mound for the A's, was pitching when the big crash came. Phil Weintraub started the rally with a triple. He remained at third while Homer Peel was flying out, but crossed the plate as Joe Martin, up from the Piedmont League, lined a single to left.

Blondy Ryan lined out, but Harry Danning crashed through with a single. Setting the stage for Pinch-hitter Hank Leiber, batting for Adolfo Luque, with the tying run on third and the winnng tally on second, Leiber hammered the ball to the fence in left field for a double.

With only three changes, Manager Bill Terry started his World Series line-up. Travis Jackson, apparently fully recovered from his knee injury, was at shortstop in place of Blondy Ryan, while Johnny Vergez was at third and Paul Richards substituted behind the plate for Gus Mancuso.

Hal Schumacher, the young collegian from Dolgeville, N. Y., started on the mound for the champions, and for four innings he held the A's scoreless and to three hits. In the second inning, with Ed Coleman and Eric McNair on third and second, respectively, as the result of a single and a double, Schumacher rose to the occasion, and fanned Johnson, Williams and Madjeski, in order.

Cumberland Pythians Capture Court Crown

Piedmont, W. Va., March 9 (Spl.). In a sensational battle that required the playing of an extra period, the Cumberland Knights of Pythias won the sectional independent basket ball championship here at the Armory before a capacity crowd by scoring their second straight victory over the Westvaco A. A. The score was 47 to 42.

After the regular game had ended with the score standing 41-all, the Cumberlanders put on a garrison finish in the overtime session by outpointing the locals 6 to 1. Two field baskets by Eddie Diehl, and free throws by "Doc" Huffman and Paul Holtzman decided the battle. Newlon scored a foul goal for Westvaco in the overtime period.

Memphis and Beckley In Two-Player Trade

Memphis, Tenn., March 9 (AP).—The Memphis Chicks today announced the trading of Hack Culbreth, a third baseman, to Beckley, W. Va., of the Midatlantic League, for Orville Armbrust, a promising young right-handed hurler.

Armbrust started well for the Chicks last year, winning his first six games handily, but was sent to Beckley for further experience when he hit a losing streak, the Chicks taking Pitcher Pete Beam in the exchange.

Rally Defeats Emerson by 46 to 32

Greenbrier Breaks Tie at 32-32 to Win in Last 5 Minutes.

Wheeler Injures Elbow in Lexington Battle; Charlotte Victor.

Lexington, Va., March 9 (Spl.).—Eastern High School, of Washington, defeated its neighboring rival, Tech High School, here tonight in the Washington and Lee tournament by a score of 41-23.

LEXINGTON, Va., March 9.—Caught in the maelstrom of a sensational fourth-quarter rally, after the score had shifted leads six times during the game, Emerson High School was eliminated from the South Atlantic Basket Ball Tournament here this afternoon by the cadets of Greenbrier Military School, 46-32.

With five minutes to play, and the score tied at 32-all, Artis Smith, cadet center, paved the way for a crushing defeat by sinking a deep basket, and Fizer and Conley followed with two other ringers. From this point on, the Emerson quintet was swept off its feet by the fast-playing Greenbrierites.

Wheeler Forced Out.

Waverly Wheeler, star Emerson forward, was taken from the game at the close of the third period when an old malady of water-on-the-elbow broke out again and caused a swelling. He was removed to the Stonewall Jackson Hospital, where he was shortly discharged as "not serious."

In the opening period Emerson managed to overcome a slight lead and hold a 11-9 margin when the second quarter opened. Due to a free throw and two baskets at the end of the half, Emerson was leading, 17-12, at the rest period. Greenbrier came back fast, determined to win in the third period, and, aided by the shooting of Leo Fizer, pulled the score up to 26-23, although Emerson continued to lead.

The final period was all Greenbrier. Cogar and Tipton shot baskets at odd intervals, but the Cadets massed their attack and decisively eliminated the Emersonians from tournament play. The two other Washington entries, Eastern and Tech, meet each other tonight.

Jefferson High Routed.

Thomas Jefferson High, of Richmond, was snowed under by the clever playing of Charlotte, N. C., and lost the most one-sided game of the tourney play, 45-18.

Thomas Jefferson had advanced to the quarter finals by defeating Spartanburg yesterday in an upset, while Charlotte defeated Ashland High, another Richmond team, in the opening round Thursday. Charlotte will meet the winner of the Eastern Tech battle Saturday afternoon in the semifinals.

Earl Ruth led the Charlotte attack, and he was ably assisted by the beautiful team work of Bill McCachren, center, and Clyde Mullis, forward. The entire play of the Richmond team was ragged from the start and the only baskets they scored during the first half were snowbirds.

The first quarter ended 10 to 2 and by half time Charlotte was far in the lead, 23 to 5. The third period ended with Charlotte leading, 33 to 13.

Virginia Ring Bill Sent to Governor

Richmond, Va., March 9 (Spl.).—Senate amendments to the Daughton prize fight bill were accepted today by the House without a dissenting vote.

The measure was sent to Gov. Peery for his signature.

One of the amendments fixed the maximum length of fights at 10 instead of 15 rounds. Another change prohibited gambling in the neighborhood of bouts.

It was learned tonight Peery would not consider the bill until a printed copy is sent to his office.

In some quarters, it was reported the Governor would permit the measure to become law without his signature. As this is the last week of the session, scores of bills have been passed. Peery has much more interest in several other proposals and may not get an opportunity to [illegible] boxing bill until expiration of the five days which would make the measure become law automatically.

Metz Cards 67 To Top Field At Atlanta

Leads Golden and Wright by One Stroke; Creavy Forced to Quit.

ATLANTA, Ga., March 9 (AP). Dick Metz, 24-year-old professional from Deal, N. J., shot a smart subpar 67 today to gain a single-stroke lead in the opening round of the Metropolitan Open Golf Tournament.

Conquering the combined hazards of the rugged old No. 1 East Lake course and a stiff, frigid wind, Metz bettered par 70 by 3 blows. His closest pursuers were the veteran Johnny Golden, Noroton, Conn., pro, and Tommy Wright, an 18-year-old Knoxville, Tenn., amateur, who had 68's.

Creavy Withdraws.

These three were the only players to trim par figures today, as a number of the better players were forced to be content with scores in the middle seventies, and Tom Creavy, former National professional champion from Albany, N. Y., withdrew.

Metz equaled par 35 on the front nine, but got in his damaging thrusts on the way home, scoring birdies on the eleventh, twelfth and sixteenth. On the latter two he almost holed out with his approaches for a fine 32.

Five strokes behind the leader and tied for fourth were Paul Runyan, the youthful White Plains, N. Y., professional who has been one of the sensations of the winter tour, and Willie MacFarlane, Tuckahoe, N. Y., veteran pro. Both had 72s.

Dutra, Laffoon Tied.

Mortie Dutra, of Detroit, and Ky Laffoon, of Denver, were tied at 73, while five were bracketed at 75. These included Al Watrous, Birmingham, Mich., pro.; Charles Lacey, Lakeville, L. I., pro, and Charles Black, Atlanta, amateur.

Bill Mehlhorn, Ralph Stonehouse, Horton, Smith, Jimmy Hines and Phil Perkins were among those having 75s. Craig Wood, Metz's senior professional in Deal, N. J., and the big money winner of last year's campaign, ran into trouble and wound up at 77.

He will begin his duties here September 1. His contract will run for three years. The salary was not announced.

As director of physical education at the university, Thistlethwaite will coach football, basket ball and track, sports in which he has established enviable records at other schools, although it was primarily in football that he established his reputation.

Both Dr. Boatwright and Coach Thistlethwaite said they were pleased with the appointment, which followed much investigation and conferences with a number of outstanding candidates.

Many Recommendations.

"We have received many letters recommending Mr. Thistlethwaite, the college president said, "from many authorities. He comes here with a splendid record. We're glad to get a man of such high caliber."

Meanwhile, Mr. Thistlethwaite—just try to put that name in a one-column headline—wired his pleasure at the appointment and confidence in the school's future athletically.

"I am looking forward to the work with enthusiasm," he said. "I feel that the University of Richmond has a bright future. I am impressed by my selection being by unanimous action of the athletic council and board of trustees. I pledge my best efforts to the university, her friends and the City of Richmond."

He began his coaching career at Earlham College, his alma mater, but left in 1913 to coach at Oak Park High School in Chicago.

After piling up an outstanding record there, he went to Northwestern University and later to Wisconsin. He turned out winning teams at both schools.

From Wisconsin he went to Carroll College, where, last year, he developed a football team that went through the season undefeated. His general record shows that he coached football teams to 162 victories, 52 defeats and 9 ties.

No arrangements have been made as to Thistlethwaite's assistants. It was held probable, however, that for the first year he would work with the help of the present Spider staff — Freshman Coach Mac Pitt and Graduate Manager Dave Miller.

Six Pitchers Seek 3 Jobs With Nats

Povich Sees Chapman, Prim and Linke Men Likely to Survive.

Keen Battle for Other Utility Berths Forecast From Biloxi.

By Shirley L. Povich.
(Sports Editor of The Post.)

BILOXI, Miss., March 9 (Spl.).—Hard prodded by wild-eyed reporters who were sorely temped to bite a dog in a desperate effort to manufacture something of news value among the peace, quietude and serenity of the Washington training camp, Manager Joe Cronin today accepted the challenge and boldly announced that things were progressing nicely.

That's Cronin, always doing the unexpected. Today, again, he crossed the boys. He had been expected to come right out and say fearlessly that it looked like a well-balanced race this year, or that the Nats would be up there all the way, or that the team that beat out Washington woud know it had been in a battle, or some other form of tripe that has been the chief diet of baseball fans at this season of the year since Abner Doubleday committed the first ball game in up-State New York back in 1859.

So, I am dismissing Cronin for the day and setting down a few things I happen to know in connection with what is happening.

The Washington club will scale its squad down to nine pitchers, three catchers, six infielders and five outfielders when the time comes to observe the 23-player limit on May 15.

Six of those nine pitchers are already determined—Al Crowder, Earl Whitehill, Monte Weaver, Walter Stewart, Jack Russell and Al Thomas. Dismissing the raw recruits who will have been exposed to the minor leagues for further seasoning by the time the cut in the squad is made, that leaves six pitchers to battle it out for the three remaining berths on the staff.

Half Dozen Listed.

This half dozen will comprise the perennial rookie, Bob Burke; the expensive Rochester recruit, Ed Chapman; the inexpensive but promising Ray Prim, of Albany; the old Methuselah of the minors, Alec McColl; the Chicago fat boy who isn't so fat any more, Ed Linke, and the dropped stitch in the White Sox, Hal McKain.

There they are, the six who are walking on thin ice from now until May 15. Which will stay, is your guess? Mine embraces Chapman, Prim and (don't laugh) Linke. Burke, McColl and McKain—well, we'll be seeing 'em in the minor league box scores. It looks like I'm out on the limb.

But I have my reasons. They will be tolerant with Chapman because he cost 'em so much dough. And they may be a long time forgetting that 10-inning shut-out Prim pitched against the A's in the last game of 1933 before losing in the eleventh. And, as far as Babyfaced Ed Linke is concerned, every catcher on the club is yodeling his praises in the ears of Griffith and Cronin.

The handwriting on the ball appeared for Burke last week when Griffith asked waivers on the slim southpaw and only the Browns put in a claim. McColl has a swell chance to upset the dope and win himself a season's job, but Cronin is building for the future and McColl is 39. McKain is with the club because he was signed as a free agent at no cost whatsoever. When he was with the White Sox, he was just another pitcher.

Diamonds in the Rough.

As for the rest, the Sierras, the Radonoviches, the Phillipses, the Molnars and the Schopps and Mills, they may be diamonds in the rough, but at this writing they appear to be lost balls in the rough. Sierra may wind up with Chattanooga. The others are nice lads.

The situation among the catchers is a breeze for everybody concerned. If Bolton doesn't show up, Elmer (Yoohoo) Klumpp, the Chattanooga rookie, will be the Nats No. 3 catcher, falling in behind Luke Sewell and Moe Berg, who are fixtures, like Hitler's moustachio.

Trotting onto the infield I find young Cecil Travis bulking large and threatening the utility berth of Johnny Kerr, for with Bob Boken available, three infielders are one too many, according to Cronin's plans for carrying only six infielders after May 15. Barring a shocking disappointment in Travis, Kerr is slated for other climes, for Boken, with his ability to play any position on the diamond, and his propensity for hitting at the proper moment stamp him a very valuable lad indeed.

Sauntering into the outfield, I discover three fellows aiming to land the two utility jobs—Dave Harris, Freddy Sington and Fred Dugas. One of the three must go and it won't be Harris, which narrows the competition to Sington and Dugas. I'll let you know more about that when they report on March 15, but my Albany operatives tell me that the Dugas lad is wasting his time in the minors.

Russell LeRoy Dead.

Fargo, N. Dak., March 9 (AP).—Russell LeRoy, 31, former contender for the lightweight and welterweight boxing championships, died in a hospital today after a week's illness with a complication of diseases. LeRoy retired in 1930, after losing to King Tut, of St. Paul, in St. Louis.

Some Man

Manager Reilly Colorful, a Practical Joker, Says Gallico.

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, March 9 (Sp.) There have been several requests for me to continue with the adventures of Peter (Pan) Reilly, the Gray Fox of the Ring—requests chiefly from myself to me—and so I am delighted to hearken to the clamor of my public and give in. Peter Reilly, as you all may know, is one of the last of the crew of old-time fight managers who in the palmy days of the Golden Decade used to delight both young and old with their trials and tribulations as mouthpieces for prize fighters of high and low degree. Peter is now back in the picture once more with King Levinsky, and his merry presence on the scene recalls fond and happy memories of the days of yore when he was the manager of the brilliant and colorful Jack Delaney, one of the most picturesque boxers who ever drew on a glove, and also when he acquired and kept in the family the featherweight championship of the world.

If you have been around New York's Madison Square Garden at all, you must have seen him. He is a small man with a half-cruel, half-humorous mouth and light blue and merry eyes. His hair is graying and he has a curious manner of speech, following every sentence or two with "You understand?" or "Get me?" He is an incurable practical joker, a golf maniac, a soft-spoken, pleasant companion who never takes a drink, but a man who, I imagine, is infinitely dangerous when crossed.

Lost Temper Once.

He has a blazing temper. In all the years that I have known him he has shown his teeth to me but once, and that was back in the days when Schmeling was training for Paulino, down in Jersey, and Max expressed a desire for a fast motorboat ride. Peter got the boat and we went out from Atlantic Highlands. I hinted that I thought we were on one of those fast rum boats, one of those stout sea dories into which the wine agents stuffed a couple of Liberty engines and which, when opened up, could outstep anything the Coast Guard had.

Peter was furious with me and I never knew whether it was because I had hit upon the truth or because I hadn't. At any rate, while we were cruising about with the delighted Schmeling at the helm, a Coast Guard cutter thought enough of us to make us heave to. I think the revenue men were surprised to find the next heavyweight champion aboard. Certainly they were delighted to meet him, showed him all over the cutter, fired the machine gun spitting tracer bullets for him and generally showed him the works. Then they sent us away with their blessing and a "Good luck" to Max, but Peter remained in a white rage at me all day. I had thought it was a rum boat the first time I had seen it, having just written a magazine article on them in collaboration with a pleasant Jersey off-shore pirate who operated one. The visit of the cutter didn't lull my suspicions, but Peter was furious that I should think he would risk his charge on an illegal craft.

Near Big Fortune.

Peter was once close to a great fortune with Delaney. Delaney drank secretly. Peter kept his secret magnificently. There was never a drop to be found in Delaney's training camps, and the French-Canadian was gorgeously built up as the stalwart, innocent child of the woods whose lips had yet to be sullied by the demon rum. Peter, himself, was a teetotaler. How he watched over Delaney. Jack was matched with Jimmy Maloney in the New York Garden. A knockout would have meant a shot at the heavyweight championship of the world. Delaney at that time probably had the most deadly right-hand punch in the game. Peter left Bridgeport, where Delaney was training, a few days before the fight, which perhaps was a mistake. He knew that Delanye was a sure thing to take Maloney and plunged heavily on him to win. The fight was famous for something else—the first real ticket speculator scandal broke around it.

The fight was scheduled for ten rounds. Round after round passed and Delaney never let the right hand go. Peter pleaded with him in the corner. Finally, Delaney said, sullenly—"I can't, Pete. I hurt it before I came into the ring." Peter later told me that he had one hand on the water bottle and was ready to present it to Delaney, but controlled himself.

Smashed His Hand.

Delaney had gone on a bender, and in a Pullman vestibule aimed a punch at a porter's head. The porter ducked and Delaney smashed his right hand against the steel side of the car. In the last round he hit Maloney with it once and came close to knocking him out with it. But he lost the decision and the opportunity. I never heard Peter squawk about him, though.

Peter was the manager of Andre Routis, the Frenchman whom he made featherweight champion of the world. They went to Hartford, Conn., to defend the title against Bat Battalino, one of the gamest and toughest little ringmen that ever lived. Battalino won and became the new featherweight champion. We like to tell the story that when he climbed down the ring steps he was greeted and congratulated by his new manager, Peter Reilly, but actually that is not true. But Peter did turn up as Bat's manager the next day and managed him thereafter. The fight was on the square, all right. If Routis had won, Peter would still have had the featherweight champion. It was just Peter's innocent and childlike way of keeping the succession in the family. A remarkable man.

Boy Valet Comes From Behind to Score by Half Length in Feature at Hialeah

Bradley Colt Pays $10.60 Mutuel

Goes to Front in Last Furlong and Beats Bittybit.

HIALEAH PARK, March 9 (AP).—Mrs. Dodge Sloan's Time Clock, which has been looked upon as second choice to Soon Over for the Florida Derby, today made his first public appearance of the year and could do no better than third in the 1 mile of the Coconut Grove Purse, which attracted a half dozen candidates for the closing day fixture. E. R. Bradley's Boy Valet suddenly returned to winning form in the 8-furlong test, coming from behind in impressive fashion to score a handy victory in 1:36 3-5 under topweight of 115 pounds. The Bradley colt beat A. A. Baroni's Bittybit by a length and a half. Bittybit was two length before Time Clock. Boy Valet returned $10.60.

Time Clock's last appearance was at Bowie last fall, when he finished second to Chicstraw in the Endurance Handicap. The black son of On Watch ruled a slight favorite over Bittybit, and, although he failed his backers, the colt doubtlessly will benefit by the race. He was not unduly punished and finished going resolutely.

Flint Shot Makes Bid.

Flint Shot made his bid in the first 5 furlongs, leading Bittybit by plenty of daylight. Time Clock broke on top, but dropped back to third position. Garner let him slip back to fifth place around the final bend. Meanwhile, Boy Valet had been outrun, as usual, but Don Meade shot him up fast on the outside rounding out of the back stretch. The green and white silks flashed to the front entering the last furlong and Meade had the colt in hand at the finish. Bittybit, holding on well, easily held Time Clock safe when the favorite came on again in the final drive.

Many a player threw the form sheets into the rubbish can after the running of the first event. Papyrograph, paying $56.30, suddenly found his racing legs and drove to a one-length triumph over Just Buck. The latter was four spans before Balthasar. The latter two also were lightly regarded. Happy Scot was an odds-on choice. He finished next to last after racing into second position.

Black Gift Victor.

The juvenile event, for maidens saw another hot favorite finish out of the picture. H. T. Archibald's newcomer, Candy Prince, drew a big share of the play on the strength of sizzling morning trials. The gray son of Westy Hogan—Candy Queen had the foot to lead the pack to the last furlong, where he weakened and finished fourth. Mack Garner rode his first winner for the Brookmeade Stable since recently being signed by that establishment. The veteran gave Black Gift a strong ride to win by nearly two lengths. Little Dinah, Whizzaway and Candy Prince followed, noses apart. The winner paid $9.90

Earl Porter rode his first winner in three days when he pushed the 7 to-1 hazard Ukraine first over the line in the third contest. The daughter of Blue Pete had a half-length advantage over Parity, which held on gamely to save the place from Bright Bubble, the favorite, by a length.

Double for Litzenberger.

Eddie Litzenberger, the hard ridin' kid from Calgary, Canada, chalked up a double by virtue of a powerful ride astride Chastity, which won the fourth race by a head to give form players their initial success of the day. James River, after more than a month of inaction, came back with a good effort to take the place by five lengths from Royal Gold. The filly paid $5.30.

Earl Porter wound up a double for the day astride the $17.70-shot Apprehensive, in the 1 1/16 miles of the sixth number. The filly came from well back to score by three lengths over the well-played Just Remember. Militia lost the place by a like margin.

Don Meade grabbed himself a double in the last contest, booting High Socks to a four-length victory to return $42.80. Bub McFarland took the place from Blarney Castle by a half length.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

For further proof address the author, inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Strange as it seems, you can travel eastward to go from the East to the West—and you can travel westward to go from the West to the East. As commonly used by geographers, the term Western Hemisphere denotes the half of the globe that includes North and South America, while the Eastern Hemisphere is that half in which the other continents are located.

Along that part of the imaginary line that divides the hemispheres in the Atlantic Ocean, then, the Western Hemisphere is really west of the Eastern. But, for the boundary line in the Pacific, the reverse is true. For example, in sailing from a port on the Pacific Coast of the United States a ship travels west in going from the West to the East.

This contradiction is not true of the Northern and Southern hemispheres. You must go north to reach the north, and you go south to reach the south.

The word in the puzzle above is "care." Taken in the pulral it is "cares" or "worries," which might keep one awake. Add another "s" and you have "caress."

Dear Al: Hialeah Race Track, March 9.

My long-shot special, Little Dinah, ran that real race that I have been awaiting, but a poor getaway spoiled her chances and she wound up in the second hole with a $33.90 place tag attached. She was beaten by a length and a half, at that, and we were going to collect better than 69-1 nad she won However, we were not the only ones who took a beating today. Favorite players hit the dust in six races and the day's only odds-on choices finished out of the money. Several horses made favorites in previous races, ran in improved form to win. Funny what a strange power odds have over horses. I kept Mike away from the speed books tonight and face tomorrow with high hopes. BILL.

First race—Zorana has been given a rest and comes back tomorrow loaded for bear. Will have the speedy Sky Haven and the consistent Rat C. as principal contenders.

Second race—The Pelican seems ideally suited by conditions here. Porter will have the mount and I see no reason for a miss. Fancy Flight has those recent swift races as recommenders. Bubbler to take care of the others.

Third race—Davoc will have the sturdy Robertson in the saddle tomorrow and he should improve on that last effort when Porter appeared unable to handle the job. Flaghorn figures to make a battle of it. Appomattox has a fighting chance to get in the money.

Fourth race—Angelic, Damon Runyan's representative, is reported to be a fast youngster. I'm taking him to beat New Pin, the colt that defeated a fair field the other day. Little Lie for the show end.

Fifth race—Springsteel carries another load of weight tomorrow—124 pounds to be exact—and meets about the best opposition obtainable hereabouts. However, the Labrot star has done about everything asked and belongs on top of these. Big Beau is an outsider with a chance. Blessed Event to gain the show.

Sixth race—Golden Fate gets the Bennings call here. Crowning Glory's recent win and the improved form of Cathop make them dangerous.

Seventh race—I'm picking Bright Beauty to scamper hom in front of Renewed tomorrow. Both have shown a liking for the turf course. Meade will ride Bright Beauty and I expect this one to pick up the leaders in the stretch. Attribute to show.

Sergeant Hill Takes Fair Grounds Feature

New Orleans, March 9 (AP).—Sergeant Hill, inconsistent performer from A. Schwartz's stable, staged a great stretch drive today to defeat a small field in the mile and one-sixteenth claiming feature at the Fair Grounds.

Under restraint to the head of the stretch, the 4-year-old son of General Thatcher closed fast and ran over the field in the final drive. At the finish he was three lengths in front of Arctic Star, the early pacemaker, with Pacheco third.

Well regarded in the wagering, Sergeant Hall paid $5.80 for $2 after running the distance in 1:48 1-5.

Capital Golfer Advances.

Ormond Beach, Fla., March 9 (Spl.).—George J. Adams, jr., of Washington, D. C., won a close match in the semifinal rounds of the annual Ormond Beach championship golf tournament here today. He eliminated R. E. Fields, of Cincinnati, in the second consolation division by 2 up and 1 to play. Adams plays Frank Stengle, Ormond Beach, tomorrow.

Walt Mason, Himself

Shrinking Dollars.

Of all these high financial games I have no knowledge, I confess; I hear loud wails from gents and dames, and can not fathom their distress. "Your dollar's worth but sixty cents," said James B. Simpson, yesterday; "Oh, come with me to Kedar's tents and let us weep the hours away. Oh, what will happen to our scads if they keep shrinking right along? Where is the dollar of our dads, that always stood up firm and strong? This modern scheme has little charm, and like a counterfeit it rings, and I am viewing with alarm, and calling halts and other things." I listen to remarks like these, I hear them in all neighborhoods; but when I'd buy five pounds of cheese, my dollar seems to get the goods. The grocer hands me back my change, when I demand a peck of prunes; so all this talk seems vain and strange, this talk of shrinking picayunes. I go among the village stores and purchase shoes and stovepipe hats, and Chinese matting for my floors, and salted peanuts for my cats; and my old plunk will buy as much as it would buy ere shrinkage came, and so I don't regret it much that I don't understand the game.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY — At Last, Nice Neighbors — By Harry J. Tuthill

I TALKED WITH THE WOMAN NEXTDOOR TODAY GEORGE, AND SHE AND HER HUSBAND, LIKE US, HAVE SPENT ALMOST A LIFETIME SEARCHING FOR WORTH-WHILE NEIGHBORS.
THEY'RE VERY QUIET, TOO. LIKE WE ARE.
HER HUSBAND HEARD OF YOU. HE USED TO BE A RESEARCH ENGINEER FOR SOME SORT OF CREDIT AFFAIR.
RESEARCH ENGINEER? CREDIT? THAT SOUNDS AS IF HE WAS THE ACE GO-GETTER IN A COLLECTION AGENCY.
HE'S IN OTHER WORK NOW. SOMETHING THAT KEEPS HIM UP UNTIL ALL HOURS STUDYING SCIENTIFIC MATTERS.
I NOTICED HIM LATE LAST NIGHT. HE LOOKED AS THOUGH HE HAD FALLEN ASLEEP WHILE WORKING ON A JIG-SAW PUZZLE.
SHE HAS A BIG DIAMOND RING. WHILE EXPLAINING THINGS, SHE WAVED HER HAND LESS THAN ANY NEIGHBOR I EVER SAW.
HE SEEMED TO BE VERY SHORT, UNDERSIZED NEIGHBORS JUST HAVE TO BE NICE.

Traders Show Partiality to Leaders; Turnover, 1,416,605 Shares.

New York, March 9 (AP).—Stocks had a quiet, uneven market today.

Earlier dealings witnessed an irregularly higher trend, with metals and specialties firmest, but little interest was apparent in most directions and a mild let-down developed toward the close, leaving the average about half a point lower.

Transfers totaled 1,416,605 shares.

News on Control Bill.

Press dispatches from Washington shed additional light on probable modifications of the exchange control bill, and the Senate's revised measure is expected to be ready early next week, bearing changes in the margin and broker activity provisions. Other news at the Capital was the Government report on business activity, setting forth a larger than seasonal gain for February and an upturn in commodity prices.

Stock traders showed considerable partiality toward a handful of issues. Canadian Pacific, International Nickel, Hayes Body, Kelvinator, Dresser Manufacturing, Alaska Juneau, McIntyre Porcupine, United States Smelting, Dominion Stores and Vulcan Detinning were among the best gainers.

United Aircraft slipped nearly 2. Du Pont and Allied Chemical both yielded slightly more than a point. United States Steel, Westinghouse, American Can, Harvester and National Biscuit dipped fractionally.

Canadian Issues Strong.

Canadian issues were prominent and generally strong, a circumstance that was attributed not only to reports of business improvement in the Dominion, but also to the fact that they have markets in three countries and can be sold in as many currencies. Canadian Pacific was especially strong and active.

Domestic trade news was rather encouraging. The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce estimated a 68 per cent increase in motor vehicle output for February, as compared with January, the gain over a year ago being 82 per cent.

Freight loadings last week jumped substantially over the 1933 period, though the recovery from the Washington's Birthday week this year was less than seasonal, doubtless because of the stormy weather. Nevertheless, total traffic made a new high for 1934, and loadings for this year to date exceed those of the same 1932 period.

Foreign Markets.

London—A cheerful tone prevailed on the stock exchange today in a more active session. Gold mining and nickel shares led an advance which included, although to a smaller extent, industrials, foreign bonds and transatlantic issues. Gilt-edged securities, home rails and oil shares were dull. The market closed steady.

Paris—Continued scarcity of buyers and the further drop in Citroen shares from 200 to 130, caused a lowering of prices on the bourse. Some international issues were firm exceptions. The closing was heavy.

Berlin—Trading on the boerse was more active today, and prices showed further improvement. The market remained sustained to the close.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

There Are No Longer Any Grounds for Appreciable Help to Recovery From the Administration Plan for Shorter Hours and Higher Wages.

By Ralph West Robey.

Whether much ever really was expected by the Administration from its plan for shortening hours and increasing wages under NRA codes, is a question which only it can answer with certainty. On the whole, however, in view of the immense amount of discussion that has been devoted to this subject, it appears reasonable to assume that the plan was viewed as having major possibilities as a further recovery effort. Now, however, these hopes, granted they existed in the first place, must be fairly well dissipated. After the developments of this week it is only too clear that little or nothing can be accomplished along these lines.

This does not mean, of course, that there are not many business organizations throughout the country that could afford to increase the number of employes and devote a larger share of earnings to the payment of wages. No one would doubt, I think, that there is a large number of such corporations. It is one thing to have business organizations making profits, however, and quite a different thing to justify a policy that by a discriminatory process forces such units to use these profits for wages.

Present Plan Is Based Upon Such an Idea.

Fundamentally, nevertheless, this is what must be involved in any attempt to force shorter hours and higher wages upon some business units but not others. If a standard of hours and wages is set for the whole country, as presumably more or less was the effort under the present NRA codes, everyone receives like treatment. Then, a case of justification of the procedure can be made on the basis that any business unit that is unable to live under these minimum conditions is an economic parasite and quite properly deserving of being eliminated.

Somewhat the same case can be made for imposing blanket conditions on a whole industry. That is, it is conceivable that for one reason or another it might be decided that industry A should have a 30-hour week and a $20 minimum wage, while industry B should have a 40-hour week and a $15 minimum wage. Such minima, accordingly, might be established for the industries as a whole, although the bases upon which action would be justified would need to be considered with extreme care. Certainly profits alone would not be an adequate reason for such discrimination between industries

Discrimination Between Business Units Unjustified.

When one gets beyond industries as a whole and starts making exemptions between business units within the industry all possible justification for discrimination exists. Yet, apparently, the Administration has been driven to this possibility as the only way in which it can save any of its plan for shortening hours and increasing wages. In other words, it has found that industry simply will not stand for any blanket, arbitrary modifications of this character in the codes. It has become a question, therefore, of picking out such units as appear able to stand an additional burden and ask, or perhaps force, them to shorten hours and increase wages.

This means, it seems to me, that in practice the plan of getting shorter hours and higher wages as a further recovery measure has been reduced to a scheme of specialized charity. Any industry, or business unit in an industry, that thinks it is making too much profits will make a contribution to the general welfare through taking on more employes and raising wages. Those that do not think they are making too much profits will present a case showing that they can not afford an additional burden at this time.

There may be enough philanthropic business men to lead such a plan to be of some benefit, but it does not seem likely to me that the benefit will be great.

Bonds Pushed Upward in All Categories

Sales Total $14,986,000; Easy Money Rate Prospects Aid Market.

New York, March 9 (AP).—Loans of all categories pushed up quietly in today's bond market, apparently reflecting the prospects of continued easy money rates and improvement of business and industry.

Transfers totaled $14,986,000, par value, about the same as yesterday, and the average for 60 domestic corporate issues advanced four-tenths of a point.

While United States Government securities were not quite so active as yesterday, their tone was firm, and gains of 1-32 to 11-32 of a point predominated.

Turnover Decreases.

The turnover in the section amounted to about $1,500,000, against $3,500,000 in the previous session. The called Liberty Fourth 4¼s eased slightly, but they still held a premium of 20-32s of a point above par.

The ability of a number of issues to edge into new high territory for the year was especially encouraging to traders and investors.

Among loans that recorded new peaks for 1934 were some of Union Pacific, Chesapeake & Ohio, American Telephone, Consolidated Gas, Pacific Telephone, Pennsylvania Railway, Reading, Shell Union Oil, Norfolk & Western, Public Service Electric, New England Telephone, Northern Pacific, Duquesne Light, Kansas Gas, Kansas City Power & Light, Bethlehem Steel

Wheat Prices Change Little; Slight Gains

Late Firmness Is Attributed to Winnipeg Reports of Export Demand.

Chicago, March 9 (AP).—Acting as if chained to a log, the grain markets today registered insignificant shifting of prices, with trading curtailed to a minimum.

Some evidence of slight firmness at the last in wheat values was attributed to Winnipeg reports of a little improvement of export demand for Canadian wheat.

Most operators in the Chicago wheat market were doing next to nothing, preferring apparently to exercise caution until legislative and code uncertainties at Washington become more definitely settled.

Wheat Closes Apathetic.

Wheat closed apathetic, unchanged to ⅜ higher, compared with yesterday's finish; corn, ⅛ to ⅜ up; oats, ¾ to ⅞ advanced, and provisions unchanged to a rise of 7 cents.

Throughout the day minor ups and downs witnessed in the wheat pit were taken chiefly as a reflection of the small trade passing, rather than any change in the market situation.

A downward tendency showed itself in wheat prices early, and some traders said fear of liquidation of May contracts was overhanging the market. Rallies later, which at times lifted wheat prices to fractionally above yesterday's finish, were associated with intermitttent buying tiny lots.

Effects of Reports.

Crop and weather reports affecting the wheat market seemed about a stand-off. Beneficial snows over the dry areas of wheat territory West and Southwest, with unsettled conditions predicted for much of the winter wheat crop belt, were offset by complaints of moisture deficiency in parts of the wheat belt Northwest.

Unofficial reports that enforcement of an extra duty on rye imported into the United States was unlikely acted as a drag on prices of other grains. It was not until after trading here had ended that word came of Senate action at Washington to add rye and barley to the list of base commodities which benefit under the agricultural adjustment statute.

Corn and oats traders gave more or less attention to talk of likelihood of European purchases of corn from the United States. Argentine corn crop estimates were construed as bullish.

Provisions moved upward on account of scarcity of offerings.

Refrigerator Shipping Sets February Peak

Continuing at the record-breaking pace started at the beginning of the year Leonard Refrigerator Co. rolled up a new February shipping record during the month last ended, it was reported yesterday by H. W. Burritt, vice president in charge of sales.

February shipments were 222 per cent of those for the corresponding month last year, Mr. Burritt announced.

"Most encouraging," said the Leonard vice president, "is the fact that this year we have made the best start of any year in our history. January also was a record breaker, and January and February shipments were far in excess of any made during these two months of the year since we have been in business. Shipments during January and February were 142 per cent greater than those of the corresponding months of 1933."

February shipments showed an 11 per cent gain over those for January, despite the fact that February was a shorter month, he pointed out.

The record demand for the new Leonard electric refrigerators is coming from practically all sections of the country, Mr. Burritt said. He credited it to generally increased public purchasing power, and early results from Leonard's largest advertising and selling program, launched early this year.

Metal Plant to Get Loan of $10,000,000

New York, March 8 (AP).—The American Metal Co., Ltd., today announced that it had concluded an agreement with a group of American banks for a $10,000,000 loan for the purpose of refinancing its four year 5½ per cent notes maturing April 1, of which $13,620,000 are outstanding.

The company will supply the additional sum needed to pay off the obligations. The loan is for two years and will be in three months notes with the right to seven renewals. Interest will be 5 per cent annually. A 1 per cent commission for the first year is to be paid when the loan is made and a similar amount will be paid at the beginning of the second year on the amount still unpaid.

The banking group is headed by the First National Bank of Boston. Other members are Chase National Bank, Irving Trust Co., Manufacturers Trust Co., Chemical National Bank & Trust Co., Commercial National Bank & Trust Co. and Bank of the Manhattan Co., all of New York.

Meeting With Dollfuss Is Denied by Von Papen

Berlin, March 9 (AP).—Reports that Vice Chancellor Franz von Papen would meet Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss of Austria in Rome during a conference of representatives of Austria, Hungary and Italy, were denied today.

Von Papen intended to go to Rome next week to attend a convention of the Knights of Malta, but he is confined to bed with a slight cold which will prevent his attendance.

Radio Waves and Ripples

THAT his oldest son is his radio partner never struck Ernie Stoneman as being in the least unusual.

Ernie and his son, Eddie, 14, sing hillbilly tunes on WMAL for 30 minutes every Friday morning. The tunes they learned in the Virginia hill country, but it never occurred to either of them that there were folks in the city who would pay to hear such music until the bank foreclosed on their farm.

The probable reason why Eddie never has been particularly impressed by the fact that his son is his partner is that he is the father of 11 children. A man with a family like that has a right to expect almost anything but twins.

WHATEVER shocks may be left in the Metropolitan's handling of Richard Strauss' "Salome" should be entirely absorbed by invisibility for the thousands who will want their radio opera this afternoon.

VINCENT CALENDO was selected—sight unseen—by four juries of women listeners for National's Waves of Romance. The show goes on WRC at 5:15 p. m. tomorrow.

The text of the opera is a German translation of Oscar Wilde's one-act tragedy of the same name. There is no introduction, no overture. A clarinet ripples the scale, the orchestra shimmers and Salome's melody is heard off stage.

The story is well enough known to make its retelling undesirable. Gota Ljungberg, Swedish soprano, who sang the title role in the revival performance of the opera several weeks ago, will be heard in the part again. Max Lorenx has been cast as Herod and Friedrich Schorr as Jokanaan.

The equally familiar "Pagliacci" will open the afternoon's performance with Giovanni Martinelli, Lawrence Tibbett and Queena Mario in the principal roles.

The National Capital Choir's usual Easter broadcast of sacred music has been scheduled by Columbia for March 30.

Culbertson on Bridge

Responding to Partner's Preemptive Bid.

In the Pair Championship of the Grand National Tournament, held in New York City in January, many interesting Slam hands were dealt. On the hand shown below, which obviously is a lay-down for six hearts, only one team scored the maximum result. This team, strangely enough, was the only team in the room with so much as a plus score on the board. Due to the fact that Howell Match Point Scoring was used, every other team greedily attempted to cash in on their honor score and played the hand at four spades, which can not be made. At the table where the best result was attained the North player, to whom the chief credit is due, was Mr. Louis H. Watson, of New York City.

South, Dealer.
Neither side vulnerable.

	♠ A K J 10 6 4 ♡ A 7 ◇ 9 ♣ A 6 4 3
♠ Q 8 ♡ 8 6 5 ◇ A K 7 6 ♣ Q J 10 5	W E S	♠ 9 7 5 3 2 ♡ J ◇ Q J 8 5 ♣ K 9 2
	♠ K Q 10 9 4 3 2 ♡ 10 4 3 2 ◇ 8 7 ♣ —

The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs:)

South	West	North	East
4♡(1)	Pass	6♡(2)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—A good bid when not vulnerable. Most South players chose to adopt a waiting policy and passed this hand, but in this particular instance, South realized the distributional possibilties of his hand and decided to make an attempt to shut out the opponents, naturally not knowing that his partner held the big hand

2—A very fine bid, indeed. Mr. Watson realized instantaneously that, honors or no honors, it was hopeless to attempt to play the hand in spades after his partner's four-heart bid, which was probably made because South feared an opposing spade game. Although North knew that his partner was weak in honor strength, he quite properly decided that his hand was strong enough to justify at least a Small Slam contract in hearts. He further realized that there would be no particular point in showing spades first, and accordingly jumped to six hearts immediately.

West's opening lead was the diamond King, and with a diamond continuation, South's play was very simple. However, even a club continuation, which would give South the greatest amount of difficulty, could not defeat the hand, as Declarer would then merely ruff two diamonds in Dummy, one with the heart Ace, and, after discarding his two remaining losers on the Ace and King of spades and dropping the heart Knave on the first round of the suit, claim the balance.

Did Indians Croon?

Modern crooners sing "Indian love songs." Indians never did. An Indian making love would no more have thought of singing an "Indian musical composition" than he would have considered breaking into a tap dance.
